The Young Folks.

GONE!
Lonely 'twixt the sky.
Toes of sunset gleamed,
And with a sigh
Gently I called her name.
Soul'd the sun catch her,
Tranquillized each leaf,
Whispered the fly bell.
"What is thy grief?"
Sigh'd with heart aching.
Bleathed my darling's name.
Flowers she loved you all.
Where's the he
She'll call to your call,
But he is no
Sweetly they called her name.
Called but she adored.

Never, al., never more.
Heart kept silent.
Leaning close as dove,
Dear heart of life.
Weeping, "I love the same,
Come—but she never came.
Colder, the wind swept on.
Flame of life is gone.
Flowers will bloom the same,
Mistletoe holds her name.

ONE OF HUNDREDS' LOVE-STORIES.

"You do not answer me, darling!—You do not speak!"

Leaves Armilla slowly drew her broad-crowned head and turned to the pleading, handsome man, who bent to catch her lightest whisper, a face of dazzling liveliness, a grandly perfect, gleaming face on which the morning sunshine glistens as it falls through curtains of misty, priceless lace, but it finds in that face no flaw of color or contour, but though the lips part like the petals of a summer rose the whimpred word falls all too faintly even to reach the lover's ear.

A brief moment Wayne Clifford feels his heart quicken and burn with a passion that quivers in his very soul, when her calm grey eyes meet his for an instant before they drop under his ardent gaze. He bends his proud and graceful figure still lower to listen.

"Whisper it once again, my darling!" he pleads. Let me know my fate from your own dear lips—dear, whether they bid me live or whisper only my death sentence, for life without you is death. You cannot, cannot turn away the rich mine of love I pour at your feet; you are life and light and hope to me; tell me you love me, darling!"

Again the faint suspicion of a blush crosses the beautiful face and dies away under the white collar at her throat, as the averse eyes lift timidly to his own and the soft arched lips apart again with a whisper all but inaudible.

With a quick, impulsive movement he drops upon her knees before her; she can feel the earnest pulse of her dark, magnificient eyes burning upon her, lie unutterable in this every glance.

"Speak to me here! I cried, his rich voice trembling with a passionate energy. "Speak to me here, at your feet, and tell me that I have found it and it is mine!"

The sweet face bends lower and nearer to his own; the beautiful arches lips part with the quivering tenderness that made in the sunbeam that kisses them, and faintly, yet clearly as the distant echo of a silver bell, Wayne Clifford hears her murmur:

"Rats!"

For a moment the strong man bowed under the blow, like a pine tree bending before the Alpine blast, and then—years afterward he could not tell how, and it only happened three days ago—he staggered out into the air and stood like a man in a dream on the front steps of her father's house, the mellow morning sunlight bathed his splendid figure as he bent to break the dust and carpet-lust from the knees of his trousers.

A CHAPTER ON SNAKES.

The People published the following significant chapter on snakes:

"Twenty-five snakes running through streets—that's free whiskey."

"Twenty-five snakes gathered in a box, in which twenty-five holes are made by the authority of the court—that's low license."

"Ten of the holes are closed, and the snakes all get out through the other fifteen—that's high license."

"Drive all the snakes over to the next village—that's local option."

"Kill all the snakes—that's prohibition."

Away with the serpents of the still!

SIMULATIONS OF ANIMALS.

S. E. Pearl, writing from Aswan, notices a singular case of mimicry on the part of a cobra, which, when suddenly surprised, erects its head in a attitude that caused the writer to mistake it for a shrew, probably the very animal that preyed upon it. The resemblance is caused by two lateral prolongations and a pointed tip to the head. These, when lifted in the peculiar attitude assumed, simulate ears and a long muzzle, while the mouth-part in profile look like the mouth of a vertebrate. The same writer states that the tiger causes the Sambar deer to run by it by uttering a whistle which only an expert can tell from that of a deer. The eye and nose lumps of a crocodile are so like the lumps of foam that Mr. Paul confesses that he has been deceived until he saw the supposed foam sink. He believes this simulation is useful to the crocodile in obtaining food.

The decay of animal tissue, and to some extent the loss of teeth of all civilized races, has been accounted for by the best English authorities on the score of the heavier draughts made by the brain on general physical and nervous systems. It is supposed that the forms that would be applied to re-pairing the teeth if used elsewhere.

Cases and Effects.

Many persons wonder at the tired, worn and weary feeling that oppresses them without any apparent cause. It may be poverty of the blood or a disordered stomach; in either case the stomach, blood and liver are not performing their regular functions and, with many persons, they will follow a dull, heavy headache, jnanes, and many other symptoms that precede a well developed case of Dyspepsia, purify the blood, cleanse the system of the cloven secretions by using Messrs. Mandrake Mixture, prepared by J. B. Meacham, 185 Yonge street, a chemist of nineteen years experience.

Dangerous Counterfeits.

Counterfeits are always dangerous, more so that they always closely imitate the original in appearance and name. The remarkable success achieved by Nasal Balm as a positive cure for Colds and Cold in the Head has induced unscrupulous parties to imitate it. The public are cautioned not to be deceived by various imitations Nasal Balm in name and appearance, bearing such names as Nasal Cream, Nasal Balsam, etc. Ask for Nasal Balm and do not take imitations dealers may urge upon you.
