

The Young Folks.

UPSETTING THE WATER-PAIL.

The water of the water-pail was on the floor. The children were told under cover to stay.

A young man turned his career—First, then, then a truck and a car in the street.

Oh, will you the spirits that rose on the air From Fred in convulsion, and bridge in wrath.

His attention was attracted by the domain. Directed and explained by this troublesome bath.

Not an empty vessel in the shape of mamma. Deceived from regions above to the scene; And out of the class you budget emerged.

Her lip to rights, and her temper seared. While Mace's feet, clad in a suit of dry clothes.

With water, he said, and terrors allied. For a few moments he consented to be a member of the class in his own right.

Just then, from the clouds hanging low overhead. Came the rain in a downfall of evil, heavy showers.

That drenched the ground, turning paths into brooks. Overturning the grass and drowning the flowers.

As Fred, looking from a window behind. The food reaching past, and the garden soaked.

He shouted aloud in a transport of grief: "Oh, God, his eyes! a big water-pail, too!"

A WORTHY SET OF PARABLES. Once upon a time, Jacob married Ruth, and they set up housekeeping.

Now, in this same town, Edward married Sarah, and they rented a farm for their home.

And Sarah was present and loved her husband, and they laid up money together, and sometimes Sarah carried the gold.

And Sarah was present and loved her husband, and they laid up money together, and sometimes Sarah carried the gold.

And Sarah was present and loved her husband, and they laid up money together, and sometimes Sarah carried the gold.
