And a quest old man was he; He was angle lu point from his elbow joint To the cap of his awkward knee, His less were long and his face was long. And as sad as a face could be. But his eyes were bright with a dangerous light As he bounned with gloudish gice;

"Only a penny a loaf, Only a pounty a low. Tis only a penny a lost to the poor.

Hat tis millions of dollars to me! He bought all the bread in the town one day. And the poor man cursed amain; But little be cared bow the sators fared-Be was not in a caring vein. For the golden wheat that was made to est To him was a thing for sain, So his features then wore a ghastly grin

As he hummed a merry strain : "Only a penny a loaf, Only a penny a load, . Tis only a penny a lost to the poor, But 'tis millions of dollars to me!"

The poor man sat at his meagre board. With his wife and his children near : Oh, they saw not, I ween, the phantom lean That gazed on their feast with a leer :-And they never thought that a guest unsought, That wraith of an old man quoer,

Stood alleht and grim in a corner dim And whispered this charas drear; Only a penny a loaf. Only a penny a lead

Tis only a penny to you, my doars, And 'tis millions of dullars to mo!

QUEER MISTAKES OF PARIS EXPERTS

The annals of the Hotel Dronot abound in stories of queer mistakes made by socalled experts: how one mistook the title of a picture, "Salvator Mandi," for the name of a " Venetian painter, rival of Salvator Rosa;" how another contributed to Velasquez, who died in 1660, a portrait of Louis XV., who was both to 1710; how anther offered a picture of a women washing dishes as a "portrait of Rubens' Wife, by himself," and volunteered the explanation that, "as everybody knew, Rubens married his cook." The men who are at the head of the profession are jucapable of such gross ignorance as this : nevertheless, even experts of the highest grade are fallible Thus quite recently an emment Parisian dealer offered without hisitation 30,000 france for an antique Persian mosque lamp. fabricated a few years ago at Vangirard by the famous Brocart; and still more recently the most emineut expert in Paris asked in a sale the modest sum of 100 france for
