THE JUDGE'S STORY.

I got into bad company once, and the reult of so doing I shall not easily forget. The story is short, and I will relate Among the companions of my youth was Timothy Donnegan, a rowdyish, immora fellow, who had some hold on my affections because of his dexterity in running, jump ing, ball-playing, etc .- sports of which was passionately fond.

While walking with Donnegan one norning he found a horseshoe, and becom ing loquacious over the " good luck" was swinging if about his head, when unintentionally it slipped away and went crashing through the window of a druggist, striking the spothecary a stinging blow on the wrist. At first I broke into a ringing laugh, and stood looking at the shattered glass. Upon turning around I saw that Donnegan had disappeared, leaving me escape the impending demands for satisfaction as best I could. Foolishly I started when it was too late, to run up the avenue The irste pharmacist followed. Had race been Apothecary vs. John H .... would have proved the better man; but blue coated policeman, joining in the chase so terrified me that my knees began to weaken, and I was soon captured. On the accusation of the druggist I was narched to the justice's office, which was a room in the city prison.

Fifteen or twenty boys, attracted by the sight followed us. The shame and indignation which filled my soul as .I passed through the streets, the gazing stock of the crowd, cannot be effaced from my memory. One thing I determined-my mother other, and, in the momentary hush that should never know of my disgrace. I was led up three flight of stairs into a long room, in the farther side of which were two windows overlooking our yard The door was closed behind me ; I was prisoner. The peculiar, heart-sickening sensation sometimes experienced by those who, when visiting prisons, are detained longer than they desire-that feeling almost overpowered me.

It was about five o'clock. I had eaten nothing since breakfast. My courage be can to fail. Nevertheless, the determination to conceal my identity was diminished Impelled by irresistable curiosity, I walked to the window. On the lawn my mother was seated. Her actions indicated that she was uneasy, but as yet not positively alarmed. Once before I had absented myself from dinner without notifying her, and she doubtless thought that this was a repetition of the offense. Suddenly she lifted her head. I though her eyes were directed toward me; and although the shadows made it impossible for an outsider to see more than my form, quickly drew back.

About half an hour lather entered . vard. I saw mother speak to him. He was evidently much slarmed, for he immediately hurried away. Soon after my mother went into the house. O how my heart sched to call out "Mamma! manima!" The intervening space would probably have rendered the my useless; but pride prevented me from making the attempt. Hour after hour I kept watching our door and windows, hoping to see some I loved. Interse shame and strong fear of being discovered racked my scul. About ten o'clock the cas jets were lighted at

It was a false pride, but !

How long I remained at the window do not know. It must have been after midnight when I fell exhausted upon small cot. Visions of flashing lights and of myriads of angry pharmacists, all in hot pursuit of me, troubled my slsep. Early in the morning I was awakened and brought down stairs. I was taken into the justice's room. There stood my father, pale and weary, but yet with-love and happiness portrayed on every feature. All my hopes for concealment were spoiled. An indiscribable sense of relief filled my being. In the midst of sobbs and smiles 1 explained everything. The druggist mollified by a twenty-dollar bill, withdrew his charge. Without delay I was almost carri ed home by my dear father. Soon I was in my mother's arms. What indescribable joy! Such is the story. I have picked my company with more care since that experience.-N. Y. Observer.

"TOO MUCHEE BY AND BY." "What is your complaint against this oning man, John !" said the magistrate to the Chinese laundryman, who had summoned a young gentleman whose laundry bill was in arrears. "He too muchee by and by," was the answer of the aggrieved Celestial, who evi dently knew what ailed the young man, gue like the devil .- Fielding. ' They are never alone that are accompaneven if he could not express his views in the most classical English. There are other youngsters who are troubled with the same complaint, "too muchee by and by." The boy who has to be called four times in the morning, and then is late to breakfast; the boy who says "In a minute" when his mother calls him | Honry. to do chores or run errands; the young gentleman who forgets his promise to bring wood or draw water : the young lady who | Swift ! always "meant to" do things and have them set in order, but who never, never carried out her intentions; the legions of folks who always have to be waited forall these bave " too muchee by and by."

Beauty is worse than wine, it intoxicates both the holder and the beholder.-Zim-People are likely to sing themselves into perdition with "the sweet by and by." What they need is the sweet pow, which is the accepted time and the day of salva-

THE WISDOM OF ECONOMY.

Look most to your spending. No matter what comes in, if more goes out you will be poor always. The art is not in making money, but in keeping it; little expenses, like mice in a barn, when there are many make great waste. Hair by hair the head gets bald; straw by straw the thatch goes off the cottage; drop by drop the rain comes into the chamber. A barrel is soon empty if the tap leaks but a drop a minute. When you mean to save begin with your month; there are many thieves down the red lane. The ale-jug is a great waste. In all other things keep within compass. clothes choose suitable and lasting stuff, and not tawdry fineries. To be warm is the main thing, never mind the looks. Never stretch your legs further than the blanket will reach, or you will soon be cold. A feel may make money, but it needs t wise man to spend it. Remember it is easier to build two chimneys than to keep one going. If you give all to back and board. there is nothing left for the savings bank. Fare hard, and work while you are young
