The Young Folks.

THE BETTER PRAYER.

When I sit and think of heaven so beautiful and think of the sweet peace reigning there and the quietness here below, I am filled with a sense of the safe, sure justice beside the earthly wrong. And act our rating discards against celestial And all the full securities beside "O Lord, how long?" Oh, then I long to be there, and in my heart I pray, "Lord, open then the pearl gates, and let me in."

And thus I turn to earth again, and in my thoughts I see. The small, simple crosses given in charge of me. The work that needs to be done there which the church set out to it, when difficulties have been cast without total abatement.

For the thorough and speedy cure of the Skin Diseases and Eruptions of the Skin.

The brook that flows the trail that brings the horseback riders with ease. The plants that must be trained and set to catch the sun and dew; And those who are too weak to do there, that may have to stay.

"Lord, shut that gate, and shut not out the work to day." —Sister O'leary.

An Army Kitten.

One evening, toward the close of the winter, while Union soldiers lay in camp on a hillside near the Staunton River, Virginia, the cry of "Hail! who goes there?" from a sentry, startled every longer at his feet; and several of the more curious ran to the guard-line to find out what the trouble was. A minute later all knew that the night visitor who had been challenged was no enemy. A little little girl, about ten years of age, holding a white kitten in her arms, came forward into the light of the fire, conducted by two soldiers, who had told the sentry to pass her in, and who looked as proud as if they were escorting a queen.

The whole regiment gathered—including the Colonel himself—to look at the child and hear her tell her story. A very short story it was—scarcely a paragraph; but there was nothing enough in it for a full chapter. She lived near by with her father, who was sick and poor; and they were Northerners, she said, and "Union folks." Her mother was dead, and her brother had been killed while fighting in the Federal army. She wanted to give something, and when the Union soldiers came she thought she would bring her pet kitten and present it to the Colonels.

The Colonel took the little girl in his arms and kissed her, and the kitten too, and said he was not a bit ashamed of his weakness. He accepted the kitten with thanks, and its innocent dolor was gallantly wiped on to her humble home, loaded with generous contributions.

The white kitten was adopted by the regiment, but considered the property and special pet of the Colonel, and when the war was over he took it home with him. Like the white lamb that staid and fed with the visitors after the battle of Antietam, that little creature, during its short but stirring army life, was a daily inspiration to better feelings and thoughts in the presence of all that is worst—a living flag of true gleaming among the thunderbolts of human passion and strife.—Harper's Young People.

The Power of a "No."

The most tremendous word in the English language is the short yet mighty No. It has been the pivot on which innumerable destinies have turned, for this world and the next. Spoken at the right moment, it has saved multitudes from disgrace, from ruin—yes, from an endless hell!

The splendid career of Joseph forced on the prompt "No" spoken at the very nick of time. Had he stopped to parley with that wanton woman, (as too many young men stop to talk with a bright-eyed temptress in the street,) he would have been lost. "How can I do this great wickedness and sin against God?" said him from the dizzy edge of the precipice. Daniel might easily have said to himself, "O! whatever the court here demands, and lives high on the king's meat, I do not want to be thought queer or Paritanical." He dared to sing, At the end of two weeks he had a cleaner conscience and a wester breath than any of the fast lives in the palace. "So did not I," was the motto of this sturdy testoster. If he had yielded to the current of temptation, and droned with it, we never should have heard of such a man as Daniel. All the people who made a marked success in life, and who achieve good work for God, are the people who are not ashamed to say they thought singular. The man who runs with the crowd counts for nothing. It is when he turns about and faces the multitude who are rushing on to do evil that he becomes a sturdy eye. Then by a bold protest he may "put his shoulder to the flight." So the young Monk Luther, turned about and faced the hosts of the Papacy. His heroic "No" nailed up on the church door of Wittenberg, and across Europe, from its definite and deadly dreams. Standing alone, he was reinforced by the Almighty.
