Poetry.

HOUR-CLEANING TIME.
The hour of the cherry dove,
While gleaming on the bough,
The blushing gold of daffodils,
The white petals of the snow,
But for the street or the gold
I get not sleep or ease.
They come—my patient with his brush,
The willow man today,
Oh, what a mockery is life!
A few moments' waiting, like a bird,
Has suddenly become a man,
The street days of earth and sky,
I will "house-cleaning time!"

With more of nature in their states
Than all human words, Look into the beautiful woods
The choir of the birds,
Who have their merry voices,
And must break the cobwebs down,
And play the busy broom,
Oh, what a mockery is life!
Who breaks all the room!
The little "house-cleaning time!"
The sweet spring's fragrant perfume,
Why is it that it brings to me,
I will "house-cleaning time!"

The Little Good-for-nothing.

BY BRYAN'S CHILD, JR.

John Clapin was a member of musical instrument—a small, beetle-browed man, well advanced in life—a widower, with six children in his hands. That is, he called them on his hands—grievously spoke of them as such; but, in truth, four of those children turned as much as he did. On account of his fifth child, perhaps, he had occasion to groan and complain. Said he, "My children could have labored under his hands—grievously spoke of them as such; but, in truth, four of those children turned as much as he did. On account of his fifth child, perhaps, he had occasion to groan and complain. Said

account of his fifth child, perhaps, he had occasion to groan and complain. Said
