Poetry.

"Here it is a grand demand from Barnes & Co. And we must in some way send them a thousand dollars not later than tomorrow night. How can we do it?"

"I know that it is very unkind in me to give it, never dreaming how impossible it is for what a critical state our business stands in now. Well, I shall have to go to William first. I may get a hundred from him. And, although I hate it, I guess I will have to run up to father's for the other two. Let me see. The afternoon train for D— goes at 4.15. Just time for dinner, before, and no time to lose now."

At three o'clock Mr. Close returned. Charles saw directly that he had been successful, and so remarked.
"Yes; with but little trouble. I trust you will have the same good luck. Two hundred I got from Mr. Close. He has saved that amount from last afternoon for household expenditure during the past year. She was very happy to help us that much. The other hundred came from my father. So, you see, we need be in no particular hurry to return either."

Allie's Trial.

Allie Leland sat in the same position her husband had left her half an hour before at the head of the breakfast table. Her dimpled chin rested on her hand, while a very decided frown disfigured her pretty young face; but a frown of anger, but of perplexity, which deepened as she murmured:
"What shall I do? I must have it!"

Allie Leland was the only child of her parents, a petted and spoiled little beauty, who had never governed the household since her baby squire could lip. "O God, what a trial!"

Now, although not twenty, she had, for nearly three years, been Charles Leland's wife; and until this year scarcely a cloud had darkened her married life.

Charles Leland was a man of no great talents, but of a very good nature. He was a simple, unassuming, and unambitious man. He had a good deal of money, but he was not a miser. He was a kind, generous, and affectionate man. He was a good father, a good husband, and a good friend.

The Work of the Christian Endeavor Societies.

Those who say there is nothing new under the sun would be sorely put to it to find the counterpart of the Young People's Societies of Christendom. Since the dawn of the year of grace, has the earth thrilled to the tread of 1,200,000 young people bound together with a single pledge—'to do what? Elect Christ! Elect Christ! Elect Christ!'

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun. It is a new thing under the sun.

Rebelling Until It Got Home Rule.

It was true that fifty years ago Lower Canada was not merely agitated but rebellious. It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government.

It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government.

It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government. It was a rebellion against the British government.
