The Young Folks.

THE GREETING OF THE NEW YEAR

The new blue and white.
At the gate of the glad New Year;
Her face with hope is bright,
Though the winter world is drear.

She smiles with welcome sweet;
She says "Good-bye to the old year;
With willing feet,
And the heart of a little child.

So shall you treasure find,
Better than lands or gold;
Friends that are true and kind.
Love that it wealth entitles.

Humbly my lesson learn,
So shall you wisdom gain
Deep peace your soul shall earn
Through the discipline of pain.

Hark to the New Year's voice,
With its call to work and cheer;
O'erage, have hearts, rejoice!
For that is always near.

Snow may be dark with storm,
While fierce the north winds blow,
Yet earth at heart is warm,
And the new drifts hide the rose."

WIT AND HUMOR.

A lady not feeling as well as she liked, went to consult a physician. "Well," said the doctor after looking at her tongue, feeling her pulse, and asking her sundry questions, "I should advise you—yes, I should advise you—shem!—to get married." "Are you single, Doctor?" inquired the fair patient, with a significant yet modest smile. "I am, my dear lady, but it is not etiquette, you know, for physicians to take the physick they prescribe."

A pretentious young yachtmaster, who was boasting of his marine experience, said to his uncle: "You landlubber, who always stay on the shore, know nothing about equals!" to which the old man grimly replied: "We don't, heh! Let me tell you, young man, that I've got a little granddaddy that can give you points about equals every day of your life."

A gentleman passing along the street the other evening detected a boy picking his pocket and seizing him, had determined to have him committed, when the boy begged heartily for mercy. "For, indeed, sir," said he, "it is my first offence, but I have one honest brother, and take any of these five you like best."

"How profoundly still and beautiful is the night," she whispered, leaning her frail-reined temple against his coster-coat and fixing her dreamy eyes on the far-off Phœnix. "How soothin'!" "Yes," he replied, twirling with the golden strands of her hair; "and what a night to shoot cat's!" "Doctor," said a fashionable belle, "what do you think of tight-lacing?" The doctor solemnly replied: "Madam all I can say is, that the more a woman's waist is shaped like an hour glass, the sooner will her bands of life run out."

"Now then, sir," roared an angry barrister at a dull witness, "will you tell the jury which is the oldest—your son or brother?" "He is the eldest now, but if I live three years longer we shall be of the same age."

"James," said a small old veteran to his son—"James, never kick a man when he is down, because it's cowardly."

"I won't, father," responded James; "but will I kick him when he is up, because it's risky?"

A witness in a Kansas law-court, being called by a cross-examining lawyer, called upon the Court for protection. The judge handed him a pistol. "I have no further questions to put," said the lawyer.
