"Why are you unhappy? Is that you don't sell more goods?" was asked of a country merchant, whose trade was not very prosperous. "I don't know. People tell me my prices are too high." "But why don't you put your prices down?" "Because I don't sell enough to make up the difference." "What's the matter with your goods?" "I wish I could learn to sell better."

It is so discouraging! It was a tired, worn little mother who said if. They after day, and week after week, had still worried through the endless details of household duties without change or rest. It was over the same round of cares and anxieties over and over again.

The morning brought the many necessities of household duties. The noon came with its responsibilities, and the evening with its cares and anxieties.

How sad and worn that mother! As she looks over the work of the day she sees many the imperfections and failures. How van her efforts to realize a high ideal of true motherhood; but instead of this the fragments of cherished hopes are her only consolation. True, she has tried to shake her hands so skilful that nothing should be left undone; but her varied efforts the poor body wearied, and she felt that a mother's care and duties could never be done, nor her ideal ever realized. No woman else is so disconsolate.

At the dinner-table school, as life lasting as time: Whatever she moulds and builds we prize.

From the review of her mother's promptings of her heart come the grants that rule the earth. At every step of her endeavor she meets difficulties that overshadow the greatness of her work, and leaves her little more than the "shreds and patches" of an existence from which to weave the warp and woof of a life dearer than her own.

AN INGENIOUS PRINTER.

From Harper's Young People.

It requires a great deal of ingenuity to become a successful printer. Boys with printing presses, and ambitions to develop into great printers, should remember this, and exercise their inventive qualities at every opportunity.

A story is told of a Prague printer who got himself out of a very disagreeable dilemma by the use of his ingenious mind. He was once called upon to print a report of the Board of Trade of his native city in the two languages of the country, German and Czech, and the representatives of either nation strenuously desired that this report should be printed in the parallel columns on each page. The wary printer got out of his dilemma by turning one column upside down throughout the book and arranging the titles accordingly so that each language had a front column on every page.

THE DANDY.

He has a fine form and mighty beauty, and the chief end of his life is to display them. With notable diabolical cameras, he photographs the most sumptuous fashions, finely made, and dandified, and his pictures are mostly fitted to the unapproachable sin of his eyes! His pretensions upon cravats employs a profound discrimination in selecting a hair, a vest, and a coat. His conclusions upon the tastefulness of a button or a collar, with the deliberation of a statesman.

Satisfactorily caparisoned, the dandy saunters in fashionable galleries, or flouts in style saloons, or parades the streets with shimmering bolides, or delights their ringing rats with compliments of flattery, 2000 words of the general good opinion, indolent butts, for the most part, from flower-strewn slums, and sinks down and dies an thought and unrewarded.
