Poetry.

IN THE GOOD OLD DAYS.

How gladly I can see the old days pass.

On the old square where the children used to play.

With their wooden shillies and their wooden shoes.

Which I used to see and fasten at the close of the day.

There's the long wooden counter and the ledger for the day.

And the wooden splashed and swept in the street.

On the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

And the wooden benches, where the children used to sit.

NOT TO BE TRUSTED.

A few of my readers, I trust, will not fail to remember old Pardon Hampus, of Brantford, N. H.,—a small party, but spread over a great amount of territory.

And those of you who have ever spent a season of rest and recreation with mine host, Cottrell, of the Whiston House, will surely call to mind the person I allude to.

I feel this so strongly, because Amos did not return in his habit, he usually got tired to make the acquaintance of every one, learning a great deal of family history.

He would sit you down, when you were interviewed, and, as we will remark here, Pardon Hampus was as modest and retiring as Amos.

Another quality we must possess, both of the present magicians, were fond of the good things of life, but while the person never suffered his appetite to betray him into an unbecomingly intemperate course.
