The Young Folks.

ACCOUNTED FOR.
From Harper's Young People.
I am well now.
But why I can't eat.
I had some ice cream yesterday,
And gained four pounds.
I also had some raspberries,
And gained another two.
I am not feeling well today.
Not picking three or four.
The doctor says I can't make Me ill. I was ill yesterday.
I sort of think that's funny.
comes away from the heat.

RELIGION FOR YOUNG MEN.

Shall I speak of the beauty of holiness in youth? I fancy that young men are, most of all, inclined to feel soothed by the whole thing, to settle it in a corner of grave recollection. There is a sort of cast, all very proper, for such a man, but a young man looking forward to the coming work and pleasure of life, is rejoicing in vigorous life, & wait a while. And yet it is in this very life of vigorous youth with its keen sense of life, youth brave and skillful in many sports; youth just entering on the strong work and strong temptations of the world - it is just such a life that earnest, unaffected religion brings to the very finest grace of realhood. It would not make him look back, however, with help from his strength, it would not make him keep it sweet and wholesome, but every merry laugh that comes ringing in through the halls of memory is that of one of my early friends who always seemed to me the most like Christ of all I ever knew. Religion - earnest, unashamed religion - does not make a young man less brave, but more, adding to mere nerve and pluck that finer courage which can stand up squarely against wrong: say "No" to profligacy and dissipation, and say it as to be expected. And so, to the whole open life, religion brings a richer sense of appreciation of all things great, good, and that interest in higher things which keeps him in the front - the strong and helpful men of each new generation. - Rev. Brooke Herford, D. D.

A CASE OF HAD TO.

"I had a funny experience in a little town on the Mississippi," said R. C. Blackley, a travelling man. "The place had but one hotel, the landlord of which conducted everything except the cooking and house cleaning, which his wife attended to. I was the only guest, and when I told him that I wanted to go up the river on a packet boat anywhere between Herculaneum and three o'clock in the morning, I was shown to a room immediately on the off-chance that I might be going to sleep. I heard a shrill feminine voice call, 'John, you come to bed.' 'Hello, you know I have to go to bed. Go to wake that blamed drummer.' I enjoyed the situation and laughed myself wide awake, not getting sleepy for two hours. Then the feminine voice called again, 'John, I say, come to bed.' 'I want to go to bed.' 'Last night that pesky drummer woke him up.' 'Taint no use to run a hotel,' and there was silence again. Finally, I went to sleep, and was awoken by a sharp pain in my toe. I looked down at it, and said, 'I don't believe I'll go on that boat. I'm too tired.' 'I'll wait until tomorrow.' 'I'll rock you won't. You be down by two minutes or two hours.' 'I'll be after you. I ain't going to set up all night for nothing.' 'I caught that boat.' Cincinnati Enquirer.

AN ECCENTRIC JUDGE.

The late Sir Matthew Boggs, of British Columbia, was a trifling eccentric. A little while ago the journalists of the province came under his caustic notice. Sometimes the juries serving under him were very easily dealt with. For example, in 1893 a man was tried in Victoria with killing another man with a shotgun, and in the face of the Judge's summing up the jury brought in a verdict of Not guilty. This gained for them a very pointed judicial admonition. Had the Chief Justice: "Gentlemen of the jury, mind, that is your verdict, not mine. On your own conscience will rest the stigma of returning such a disgraceful verdict. Many repetitions of such conduct as yours will make trial by a horrible farce, and the city of Victoria a nest of immorality and crime. Go I have nothing more to say to you." Then, turning to the prisoner, the Chief Justice added: "You are discharged. Go and sambag those juries, they deserve it."

A Good Appetite.

Always accompanies good health, and an absence of appetite is an indication of something wrong. This universal rule applies to all those who have lived food, nerves, and muscles in restoring the appetite, and a purifier of the blood, constitutes the strongest recommendation that can be urged for any medicine.
