THE ELIXIR OF YOUTH.
It was midnight. The majority of the town of Acton were asleep in their beds behind closed shutters.
Had they been able to look down upon the wide and deep night of a moonless street, however, they would have seen the light of a glowing window.

"THAT BOYISH BOY."
The following poem lines appeared recently in the Acton Free Press.

Oh, give me that boyish boy!
As he grows to manhood's day,
I'll be glad to see him grow,
But I'll be glad to see him stay.

A YOUNG MAN SHOULD REMEMBER.
I, that whatever else may strive to be, must first of all, be absolutely honest.

DOUBLEDIT.
Not long ago a resident of one of the small towns near New York wrote to the editor of a certain paper, whose fee for a consultation is rather less than ten dollars.

A RECKLESS SPENDTHRIFT.
The reckless manner in which some of the scions of the English nobility run into debt is illustrated by the confession made in the bankruptcy court the other day by Lord Montagu's son, who is also a nephew of the enormously wealthy Duke of Buccleuch.

HUMANE.
A subject of noble and distinguished countenance, as the other day, when he was asked by a young man who had just written a letter to the doctor about his condition, how long he had been in that condition.

A GOOD EXCUSE.
Police Magistrate (17) Hoadly, you are charged with being drunk on Monday night last.

TEN THINGS.
There are ten things for which no one has ever yet been sorry: These are: For drinking good to all.

COURTESY ON THE CHIDRON.
Fond Mother—But Edward, dear, football seems so brutal to me.

Poetry.
WHY DON'T YOU GET YOUR OWN YOUNG MAN?
There was a young man who belonged to me,
I had his name written on my heart,
And when I got up to see him one day,
I found he had gone to see a young man.

Your Wife.
Would be more than pleased if you brought her home a nice new lady.
