The Young Folks.

YOU WILL READ.

You may have a little notion that this world is only chance, that the harvest don't depend upon The grain a fellow plants. But it is not so, as saying, "All nations it is known, That when comes the time of harvest You will reap what you have sown." Every bushel you give your country is just as much stock in trade. Kept up by the hand of God, it is a customer you've made. Every time your name is printed is a clear laid away. These things you give your business lastings in a better place.

Then never mind the reaping. If the sowing has been right, For the laws of nature govern All the works of man, white. Then you'll be afraid of business, open out and make a show. For the laws of nature govern, And you'll reap just what you sow.

Epistles 1-1.

INFLUENCE OF MARRIAGE.

Habit and long life together are more important than money, and more important than general intelligence. No one is happy with the object of his attachment, until he has passed days, and above all, many days of misfortune with her. The married pair must know each other from the centre of their souls—the mysterious veil which covered the two spouses in the primitive church, must be raised in its most folds, how closely soever it may be kept drawn to the rest of the world. What! on account of the fil of caprice, or because of love, shall I be expected to let the fates of human wife and my children, and to renounce the hope of passing my declining days without them? Let us one imagine that fear will make me become a better husband. No; we do not attach ourselves to a possession which we are in danger of losing—the soul of a man as well as his body, is incomplete without his wife; he has strength, she has beauty; he combats the enemy and labors in the field, but she undertakes domestic life, his companion in writing, his partner in repose, and protectress of his existence. What! woman, man would be rude, gross, coarse, solitary. Woman spreads around him the flowers of existence. Finally, the Christian pair live and die united—in the dust they lie side by side; and they are united beyond the tomb.

COTTON SEED FOOD.

A new article has been added to the list of human foods. It is cottonseed meal. Physicians have been contemplating for a long time that the human race in civilization deserves too much bread and other cereal food—so-called cereals, that is, food, set up the system and fill with oil, causing middle-aged people to feel fatigued and pale, while a young person is bright and robust. This new food, when eaten, gives a man a good appetite, and is easily digested. Cottonseed meal has been a great boon to live stock men. Why should it not go equally well for the human race? Dr. J. V. Kannawin has found an answer for Cotton seed could easily be ground and prepared in a cleanly, careful manner and then tested in the making of mushes and breads. Perhaps in future we shall feed wheat to cattle and eat cottonseed.

LOGIC AMONG FRIENDS.

If people wish to live well together, they must not hold too much logic, and suppose that everything to be settled by sufficient reason. Dr. Johnson saw this clearly with regard to married people, when he said: "Wretched would be the pair above all others who, in their disputes, had to be adjured by argument over every small point, and to have the whole sum of their contentions reduced to a mere question of logic." But the application should be much more general than he made it. There is no time for such reasonings, and nothing that is worth them. And when we recall how law lawyers, and two politicians, can go on contending, and that there is no end of one-sided reasoning on any subject, we shall not be sure that such contention is the best mode for arriving at truth. But certainly it is not the way to arrive at good temper.

THE WORK CURE.

In that moment when you are about to commit some or other kind of disappointing feeling comes to you—when anxiety, rage, and the heart, by the skill of some disappointment, sinks far below the zero-point—then the safety for you, and the sure path into more general spiritual weariness is the duty next you. Do that anyway. Even failing feeling and nerveless hands, compel yourself to do it. Do not put it off. Do not allow yourself unwillingly to wait for better mood. Do not let the world wait for you to do it. At least a few moments of good accomplishment shall come in, a very real compensation of personal heroism. It is wonderful that strength the body next one's barely done, or sayway bravely attempted, breeds in one. Wayland Hoyt, D.D.

A minister preached an unconsciously long sermon, and, after pausing said: "And what shall I say more?" "Say again," responded the old lady, in a sharp whisper that was heard all over the church.

Try Scott's Emulsion.
