Poetry

The Family Pledge. The family pledge long with the wall, And the children, their own, We did not dare to break, To write upon it, As it was written in the wall, To write upon it, As it was written in the wall.

Dr. Harper's Patent

The child November twilight was shrouding the streets in grey shadows, as Dr. Harper's carriage rattled rapidly through the mist and rain, with the sudden gleam from an occasional gas-light flickering across his thoughtful face.

Uncle Job's Mistake

Yes, said Uncle Job, rubbing the palms of his hands together, "I really don't know what to do. I've got a girl of a nice, straight, cherry-colored complexion, with eyes as black as jet, a girl that has a fair amount of both bread, and can make soft soap with anybody. I could just give her to you."
