Sir Wilfrid Laurier's opinions concerning the Alien labor law will receive general approval in Canada. At a time when the Auglo-Saxon races are so close to unity, it would be in the highest sense improper to make any amendment to the statule, or practise of the law which might be construed as hostile. Canada has worried along for many years without an alien labor law and it will do her no injury to continue present conditions until such time as the amicable temper of the two peoples has worked out to some sort of a

The death of Hon. W. E. Gladstone was the subject of fitting comment in the House of Commons last Thursday. Sir Richard Cartwright moved that a special committee, consisting of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Charles Topper, Sir R. Cartwright, Sir Louis Davies, Sir A. Caron, Mr. Costigan and Mr. Mulcok, be appointed to prepare a resolution of condolence. Bir Richard spoke with characteristic eloquence, and referred especially to Gladstone's championing of the oppressed. In seconding the motion, Sir Charles Tupper described, the deceased statesman as "probably the most conspicuous man of the present century."

In this country, at least, where the bit terness of Imperial politics is little felt all parties alike, with a grief which is Mr. almost personal. In a century of conflict, selfishness, free-thought and falling away from ancient ideas, Mr. Gladstone stood above all men, a rallying point for every thing that was honest honorable, pure and | Considerable damage was done by the God-foaring. Well nigh peerless in oratory and statecraft, indifferent to titles and vast wealth, eminent alike in literature and scholarship, he was above all a Christian gentleman, a father, husband and patriot. The public that he loved not always trusted him. It is idle to say that he nev or erred, but on the last day, when kings, and the leaders of pations, stand forth for judgement, and the good in their lives is balanced againt the ill, few in this, or any age, will there be whose records are so brave, clean and honorable as that of William Ewart Gladstone.

THE WAR WITH SPAIN.

The Navies Continue to Play Hide and Seek in the Atlantic. THE END OF THE WAR DISTANT.

WARHINGTON, May 25 .- Definite information was received at the navy department yesterday that the Spanish fleet under Admiral Cervera is in the harbor of Santiago de Cuba, without likelihood of cacape. American ships guard the narrow entrance to the harbor. "You may quote me as saying that we suppose the Spanish fleet a at Sautiago," was Scoretary Long's guarded remark to the Globe's reporter. This was said by the Scoretary shortly after an official bulletin had been issued by the Bureau of Navigation denying the rumors of an engagement in the Windward | whatever.

Madrid, May 25 .- The anxiety concerning Admiral Cervera increases hourly. The Government tries to reassure the public by circulating favorable accounts of Santiago as a refuge for the squadron. Nevertheless, there is obvious anxiety among the officials and the press. In view of the expected severance of the last cable to Cuba the Government during the past forty-eight hours has sent long despatches to Captain General Blanco and Admiral Cervara, in response to their enquiries, instructing them as to eventualities and detailing the reliefs and supplies they may
