MISS WILLARD'S CHILDHOOD.

A peep at the home in which Miss Willard's early life was spent leaves no room for doubt as to where and how the character of the woman was formed. It was in an atmosphere of love and devotion to duty that the girl learned her first lessons of life. There is nothing in all Miss Willard's childhood, says a writer in Christian Work. more beautiful than the love and barmony that existed between the sisters-Frances - tongue, sier headache, in a and Mary. One of the pleasantest expres- somnis, etc. Hood's Pills sions was a habit, early formed, of nighty asking forgiveness for any word or act that might have been unsisterly, and thanking each other for the kindness of the day, a habit continued till the yourger said goodnight to earth. The home life was almost extusively the educator in Miss Willard's case. Until she was twelve years old her mother was her only teacher, and, even after that, school was limited. But the home was one where books were loved, and while she was still young Francis learned not only to road but to study, and to put her thoughts into writing.

Better than all for the young girl was the fact that the home she loved so well was a Christian home. In it Sunday was observed with almost Puritan strictness. Miss Willard tells of a Christmas that fell on Sunday. In order that no seonlar matters might disturb the peace of the day of rest, the christmas presents were given on Saturday evening, and then, with praiseworthy self-denial, laid aside until Monday.

Fortunately for the other two young members of the household-Olive and Mary-their presents included a Sunday book for each, while instead of the book Francis had a long desired but strictly week-day slate. That slate was a treasure, but-to-morrow was Sunday, and it was a treasure unavailable for more than twentyfour hours. A happy idea finally came into the longing little mind. Francis asked her mother:

"Might I have my new slate if promise not to draw anything but meetingsgainst self, against the family, against the State and the nation. It is a rin against God. "No drankard shall inherit the kingdom of God." . The word of God says to. It is a sin to get drunk, but, more, it is a sin not to say so. We fail if we'do not take advantage of every opportunity offered to say so. Thousands of our fellow-men are asking this question every day. It is a vital one, and its answer will have much to do toward making those who ask it better or worse. There ought not, therefore, to be any uncertain sound in our replies. Every man who indulges in intoxicating liquore is fully persuaded in his own mind that its effect on him as an individual are evil and only evil. He is not fully persuaded that he is injuring his family or his neighbor. Re cannot, however, quiet his consolence as to his God, and so after each indulgence that deprives bim of his senses, the question forces itself upon him, is it s sin to get drunk ? What a day of thanksgiving there would be in many hearts if the answer should be a strong, clear "yes," Two opportunities present themselves by which we may answer this question, that deserve special notice at this time. Our General Assembly, at its last meeting, answered it in the affirmative, by resolving:

"That it is the duty and privilege of Christians to set an example of total abstinence, for the use of all proper means, legal and otherwise, for the loosening of the power, and for the total destruction of this evil. And that to this end sessions of Churches, Presbyteries and Synods should appoint standing committees on temperance, where it has not been already done, to co-operate with the Assembly's committee to quicken the Church and to unify and direct the energies of the Church in

Our General Assembly has also recommended : "That the endeavor be made to combine the friends of temperance in their efforts against the saloon." And there is presented to us in the American Anti-Saloon League the crowning opportunity of this century, not only to say that it is a sin to got drunk, but to lessen, the number of places where men are made so. could not work. Doan's Kidney Pills There never was, and never will be, universal panaces, in one remedy, for al ills to which flesh is heir-the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient -what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however in Quinine Wine, when obtained in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual judicious use, the frailestsystems are led into convalescence and strength, by the influence which Quinino exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondence and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep, imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance-result, improved appetite.
