LITTLE KINDNESSES. BUBAN COOLIDGE. If you were tolling up a weary hill Bearing a load beyond your strongth to bes Straining each nerve untiringly, and still Stumbling and losing foothold here and there And each one passing by would do so much As give one upward lift and go their way,

Would not the slight reiterated touch Of help and kindness lighten all the day? If you were breasting a keen wind, which toss And buffeted and chilled you as you strove, Till, baffled and bewildered quite, you lost The power to see the way, and aim and mov

GEN. GRANT AS A LAUNDRYMAN

It is not always safe to play a practical joke unless you are thoroughly acquainted with your victim. It is sometimes sadly true that "the biter is bitten."

We were gathered around a bright fire in a cozy sitting-room. The Colonel to our great delight had gone back twenty-four in touch with each other. years to his tent at the base of Kenesaw Mountain, and was again, as in those past eventful years, following the banner of Sherman, Suddenly an odd thought flashed into the writer's mind and found expression in a question ;

"Colonel," I said, "I have read and heard a great deal about army life; but on one point I was never much enlightened. How was the washing done? Who did it for the soldlers?" A smile stole around the corners of the Colonel's rather stern mouth, his black eyes twinkled.

"Usually the soldiers did it for them selves, but I remember one case where Gen. Grant did some warshing for a soldier." Everybody looked up in surprise. Much as we had heard of General Grant's old army blouse and democratic ways among his men, this idea of his washing for a private was very novel. There was a chorus of questions and exclamations.

"Was it really true ? Did he wash for soldiers? How did. it happen? Tell us about it?" "Yes," said the Colonel. "It is really true, and it happened in this way It was during our advance upon Corinth several soldiers were talking together one. day. A tall, ungainly, raw redruit stepped up to them with a bundle of soiled clothes in his hand. 'Do you know where I can get this washing done?' he asked.

Two of the group were practical jokers a bright thought fisched into their heads, and as the sequel shows, unfortunately found expression, "Oh, yes, we know; just go up there with your bondle," pointing to the headquarters of General Grant, "you will see a short, stout man (describ- Low's. ing the General), who does washing. Take your bundle to him." The recruit thanked them and walked the louder he howls. off in the direction indicated. He gained entrance to headquarters, and stood in the General's presence, "What can I do for you," said General Grant, "I was direct-

Turning to an orderly, he directed him to call a guard, go with the recruit to where the jokers were standing ready to enjoy his discomfiture, and let him identify | direct paths to success. them. "Take the men to the guard house, give them this man's bundle of clothing and make them wash it thoroughly. See that the work is well done." The General was obeyed to the letter, and no more bundles of spiled clothes came to General Grant's headquarters .- Treasure Trove.

THE BIG MAN'S TOYS.

Just think of ha ving one's own railroad and being one's own engineer! How delightful it must be, whenever you want to take a train, to just step out and build your own fire, and when the steam is up, step into your own tender and start off, stopping when youlke and where you like And this is just what the Marquis of Lansdowne is able to do. He is very fond of engines and railroads, and he has had built an engine which can travel at the rate of forty miles an hour. The railroad is complete. It has switches and signalboxes, exactly as any railroad would, although it is but a mile and a half in length. The little engine burns two bundred pounds of coal a day. Besides this engine and railroad, the Marquis has a model of a Great Eastern railway engine five feet in length , perfectly fitted up, and this rans through his conservatory, a distance of a quarter of a mile. You hardly over think of a big man having toys, but you see men do play, if they are sound men, all their lives. A fast horse is to a good man what a lawn-tennis racket is to a healthy boy. It is a means of amusement and exercise. A good healthy man never forgets how to play; when he gets help. unbealthy, then he does not value play. To know how to play well, good humoredly, to play fair, is to be sound and healthy in body and sont. DIBLIKE THEIR PROFESSIONS. reasonable reach:

The almost universal disinclination of parents to bring up their children to the trades or professions they themselves follow would suggest a large number of workers in uncongenial fields. You ask a dressmaker if her daughter is likely to take to that line of work, and nine times out of ten she will answer, "I'd rather see her dead than slaving away her life as I do; no, ma'am, she won's be a dressmaker if I can

"We keep the children away; they seldom see a play. We don't want them to take to the stage. It's loo hard a life."
