SHOOTING DREAMS.

A writer speaks of the persistent peculiarity in his dreams of not being able, after game was sighted, to fire the gun, and has often wondered If this, happens with other dreamers. My own experience coincides with his, and I think may be too general to be peculiar.

Anolder brother, however, once had illerent experience. The gup of or earlier boyhood days was an old flint-look Queen's arm that had the power to shoot off a tree top and an almost equal reverse force. It was the idol as well as the terror of our young lives, and was carried over the New Hampshire hills with heroifeeling.

One night, in the stillness of the later hours, there was a tremendous jar in our sleeping room, as if a heavy body had beenviolently thrown down ... Paterfamilias, aroused by the shock, came rushing in just as my brother, in a semsolmuolent condition, was slowly gathering himself up from the floor to regain his place in bed, from which he had dropped a moment before. Father exclaimed, Bill, what is the matter?" to which Bill drowelly eplied, "I dreamed I fired the old gun and i kloked me out of bed." It was emphatic enough to him to be peculiar.

> TEACHING CHILDREN GOOD MANNERS.

Good manners cannot be learned in a moment. There are certain forms which society-has agreed people must conform to if they wish to appear well bred, and these are often not at all what the natural inclination would prompt one to do under the circumstances. Children must be taught these conventionalities and we must notbe surprised if they are sometimes slow learning them, nor despair if after much teaching they at times relapse into native barbarism. Patient perseverance in train- | oure if you write him. them will at last produce the desired result.
