The Young Folks.

"DO IT ADEN." There's a cute little lad, with jolly, black eyes, Who meets me each night with a smile; Then throwing off care I turn young once again And strive to amuse him a while. It's some trick that's new, or some story maybe That makes him laugh hearty, and then His big, chubby face he turns upward to mine, And says to mo, "do it aden."

We romp in the grass when the summer su We play where the butterflies dwell; He call me his "horsie" and drives me about, Though I don't behave very well;

The worse I "act up" the more laughing door I'll turn a big summerset, then Ho'll cry "whoa! whoa! and whip me a bit, Then say to me "do it aden."

The winter days see him as frolicsome still; His play-yard each room of our home; I'll find him at night with his face to the pan "Just waitin' for papa to come." I enter the ball, he's caught up for a kiss, With a ride to the ceiling; and then As soon as he touches the floor, he looks up,

And says to me "do it aden." The years how they come!-the years how they Our bables will soon be our mon,
