The Young Folks.

- NEW YEAR'S MORNING. A jolly little stranger Is in town to-day.
- He came last night at stroke o' twelve, So I hear them say; And every one is smiling
- As merry as you please; Pleasant words are dying, too, Like leaflets in a breeze.
- People calling, here and there, Walk and drive about; Young folks, old folk, boys and girls, All are mustered out.
- No one thinks to give a frown; Skies and oyes are bright; E'en the prim old gate-posts Have donned their caps of white,
- Wear the jaunty, pointed things With an air of gloo. You would laugh as well as I, If you chanced to see ! Every face is full of fun,
- Every heart is gay; All small quarrols forgot-Forgotton lot then stay; Rub the old score out, my dear,

Begin anow to-day.

NEW YEAR RESOLUTIONS.

By this time that innocent little twig mistletoe has done most of its wicked work and the red berries have one by one dropped from the bright holly branches. There is one turkey left and one plum pudding, but by Monday next these will have become things of the past and then we shall have launched fairly out into the new year, with all our new year resolutions on board.

New year resolutions? Pshaw I take my advice and don't make any. They're treacherous things, these fair-faced little resolutions. They flatter you so blandly, and tell you such delightful things about yourself; how noble, how self-sacrificing you are, or at least easily can be, how diligent, how sweet tempered, and what great things you are capable of, you look in your glass and think you behold an angel. But it takes only one short week and then are an ignoble wretch, that you are selfish, lazy and bad tempered, and incapable of doing any good in the world. Then they leave you, those wretched, treacherous little new year resolutions, and hide away until next Now Year's Day, when they think you have forgotten everything. So don't be caught in such a trap this new year, just be good, without telling yourself you are going to be, that's the right way. "The Bird of Time has but a little time To fluttor-and the Bird is on the wing."

HIGHLY HUMOROUS.

An American who has been travelling in England declares that he has seldom found the average inhabitant of London inclined to be discourteous. As a rule, any information asked by a stranger is given freely and kindly. But you most not expect an Englishman to forego an opportunity to make a good, robust British joke. On one occasion the traveller happened to be in the neighborhood of Milibank prison and fancied that he would like a glimpse at that famous place of detention. "Can one tell me the way to Millbank?"

he asked of a stout tradesman whom he "Aye," answered John Bull; "knook me down and rob my pockets, and you'll soon | this one ! enough be on the straight road there !" Then, without voucheaflog any further information, he passed on with a chuckle.

When the children are hungry, what do you give them? Food. When thirsty? Water. Now use the same good common sense, and what would you give them when they are too thin? The best fat-forming food, of course. Somehow you think of Scott's Emulsion at once. For a quarter of a century it has been making thin children, plump; weak children, strong; sick children,

BUYING BUNS.

The Crown Prince of Denmark is the idol of the army. One day when the autumo military manoeuvres were proceeding, the Danish army was encamped near the old castle of Hald, in Jutland. The Crown Prince was in command, and walking about in camp after the active duties of the day were over he found a crowd of soldiers gathered about a woman, who had brought in a cartful of buns to buy a penny bun. Still it was evidently a comfort to crowd around the cart, and inhale the warm odor of the delicacy which they could not otherwise enjoy, and no one noticed the Crown Prince until he was close upon them. "What is the price of your buns, good oman?" he called.

"A penny apiece, sir," said she. "Vory well, I'll buy the cartload. Get y treasurer to pay you. And you my soldiers, you have worked so hard today that you are sure to be hungry. I hope the buns will make a palatable desert

The soldiers cheered, and felt, no doubt, that there was never a prince so thoughtful as theirs.

RATHER HARD ON THE RAILROAD We have just read of a mercantile traveling agent who weighed about two hundred and fifty pounds, and who, finding it very important to get on board a railroad train, at a small station where a train did not usually stop, telegraphed the conductor to stop there for a large party. The train stopped and he stepped on board. When the conductor asked him where the party was, he Doctors. replied by asking the conductor if he didn's

This story will go very well with that of the country merchant and deacon who invited six drummers to take a seat in his pew Sunday morning, brought around the contribution box and obtained from each a liberal donation, but on Monday said-he felt obliged to tell them that as he could not patronize all and as he did not wish to show partiality, he felt compelled to order from another house not represented. We presame those drammers thought (as we once heard President Pierce say to a jury on the trial of a case in New Hampshire) that a good, honest old deacon is not necessarily any better than any other good, honest old

A MYSTERIOUS PASS-WORD.

An amusing experience of the Baroness Burdett Coutts is going the rounds. The Baroness was once -hopping in Paris, and was passed from our department to another by the shopmen, slways with the remark, "Two-ten." She was escorted from counter to counter, everywhere the cabalistic words "two-ten were repeated. Struck by the piculiarity of this refrain the Barones, asked the proprietors as she loft the establishment : "Pray what does

A STORY OF KRUGER. Illustrative of Kruger's peculiar faith, an amusing anecdote is told by a fellow Boer. Once in the early days, when game was scarce, he was one of a party who went out to hunt the hartebeest. After scouring the veldt for days without a sign of game, Paul said he would retire over the hills to pray for food as the patriarchs of old. After several hours he returned and solemnly prophesied to the party that in three days a large troop of hartebeest would pass that were struck with wonder, and Kruger became celebrated as "the man of prayer." Afterwards the Kaffir who accompanied him over the hills gave this version of the incident: When Kruger got out of sight he struck for a neighbouring kaffir krasl where, calling the Induna, he informed him that the men where starving for want of game; that a large number of armed Boers were on the other side of the hill, and that unless the Induna and his men discovered game in less than three days they would all be shot. Dear bought experience of Boer methods frightened the Keffics to that they set out, found game, and drove it towards the Boer

The jests of the rich are ever successful. There never was, and never will be, unliversal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir-the very nature of many curatives being such that were the corms of other and differently scated diseases rooted in the system of the patient -what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. Wo have, however, n Quinine Wine, when obtained in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual judicious u , the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strougth, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondence and lack of interest in life is a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep, imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame, and giving life to the digostive organs, which naturally demand increased substance-result, improved appetite.
