Spring and Summer Weakness

A spring ailment, a weakness, and debility seems to grip the strong and delicate alike. The circulation is sluggish on account of the exhausted nerve force, and the blood is poor in quality and deficient in its nourishing elements. As a result there is a general running down of the system. The stomach is disordered and the appetite poor, the liver, kidneys and bowels become inactive, and there is a lack of energy and ambition which renders work of any kind a burden. It is not strong drugs or purgatives with their depressing action that is required, but food to nourish the nerve centres and enrich the blood.

DR. WARD'S BLOOD AND NERVE PILLS

Contain the principles that go to the building up of the body through the medium of the blood and nerve.

They supply the properties that are needed to tone up the system.

Call early, no trouble to show our goods.

Poetry

They're red as pink and yellow as they smile—my love!

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

Young John Jones sat down and dreamed of the things he would do.

And the way his fancy selected these his thoughts were chosen.

WON'T KISS THEIR HUSBANDS

Mr. Jagger walked in and close at his heels stalked Mrs. Jagger.

Both seated themselves on a chair, the other on a stool, directly in front of the surrogate.

Mr. Jagger looked at the dog with the solemn eyes of a surrogate and shook his head as only a surrogate can shake it.

"Are you the witness?" he inquired of the dog's master.

"Am I?" replied Mr. Jagger. "I was subpoenaed to testify."

"What's that animal doing here?" he inquired of the surrogate.

"Nothing," replied Mr. Jagger. "He comes when I come. He goes when I go."

"The animal must leave the court. It's contempt of court to bring him here," said Mr. Jagger angrily. "Remove him instantly."

Mr. Jagger had frequently been in attendance at the police courts, and once or twice had a slight taste of the session; so that he was not much struck with the surrogate as he otherwise might have been; and he replied:

"I'll give you my opinion, sir; and shall not move a finger to prevent it. There's the animal; and any officer as please may remove him. I say nothing as to it. I know what a contempt of court is; and that's the way of it. Mr. Jagger, throw himself unobtrusively back in the chair.

"Mr. Jagger," said the surrogate to the man with the frizzled wig, "remove the dog."

Mr. Jagger laid down his pen, took off his spectacles, and the dog and told him to get out; to which Mrs. Jagger replied by snapping at him as he attempted to touch him. Mr. Jagger was staring absently out of the window. The dog looked up at him for instructions, and, regarding him as a person of some consequence, his fingers were perfectly correct, and resumed his pleasant expression to the surrogate, occasionally casting a lowering eye at the surrogate as if deliberating whether to include him in his denunciations of stupidity.

"Blag, have you removed the dog?" said Mr. Jagger, who, the dog being under his very nose, saw that he had not.

"No, sir; he resists the court," replied Mr. Jagger.

"Call Walker to assist you," said Mr. Jagger.

Walker, a thin man in drab, had anticipated something of the kind, and had accordingly withdrawn as soon as he saw that the dog was not to be removed; so that the whole court was at defiance by the dog.

"Witness!" said Mr. Jagger.

"Mr. Jagger looked the court full in the face.

"Will you oblige the court by removing that animal?" said Mr. Jagger, mildly.

"Certainly, sir," said Mr. Jagger. "Bitters, go home." Bitters rose stiffly and went out, first casting a glance at the man with the wig, for the purpose of ascertaining to what extent he was a witness.

Without a groan she fell to the ground and expired almost immediately. This awful end was witnessed by her daughter, young Miss Jagger, who, when she saw the body of her mother, was so overcome by grief that she fainted.

"I wish the young could realize how many useful things the world is waiting for, and could be taught to look for them in an age of progress, when we are all so successful in our work, and so many of our best and better ways. Encourage every sign of young luminosity. Tell a boy that you are his friend, and do not think of him as a child. It does not make him a fortune. A lucky thought is a prize worth waiting for. It is a gift from God. It is the brain that originates it. Tell him that."

"And tell him to leave stimulants and narcotics alone, and save his brain. I blame nobody but myself—that I did not think of this earlier when we were young. It is a pity that not a soul ever warned us."

"As I have been on the high-road to success, and my skill was to quick demand; but I fell into false company, and drank and smoked and gambled. It is a God-send that I have not done more."

"I'll give you a quarter after the wedding, given gift. It'll come round to you every Saturday night and pay you a quarter until I am again with you. I don't like this here gettin' married on the installment plan—let the best I can do."

"An unfortunate man had never expressed himself so freely before. It may never be heard from again. Life—as it seemed to his desolate mood—had ceased to be worth living. He was frequent and eager reader of the Companion, and felt an interest in the welfare of the world's best."

His last words of warning seem duly placed in these pages; and every such example repeats one more to the youth of the land. "Your families are God-given gifts. Conquer temptation, and keep them whole."—Youth's Companion.

EVERY MAN TO HIS TRADE.

The recent death of Miss Anderson, a well-known Parisian hostess, recalls a reply once made to her by the younger Dumas, who did not enjoy a certain kind of building. At a dinner given by Miss Anderson, the younger Dumas, who did not enjoy a certain kind of building, was asked to give a toast.

DISGUISED COMPLIMENT

The "gentleman farmer," as called, has to put up with many jokes at his expense in print.

In real life he is not often treated to speeches as amusing as our whole society came to our ears.

Wherever he goes he is treated to a "gentleman farmer" speech, and wherever he goes he is treated to a "gentleman farmer" speech.
