Portry

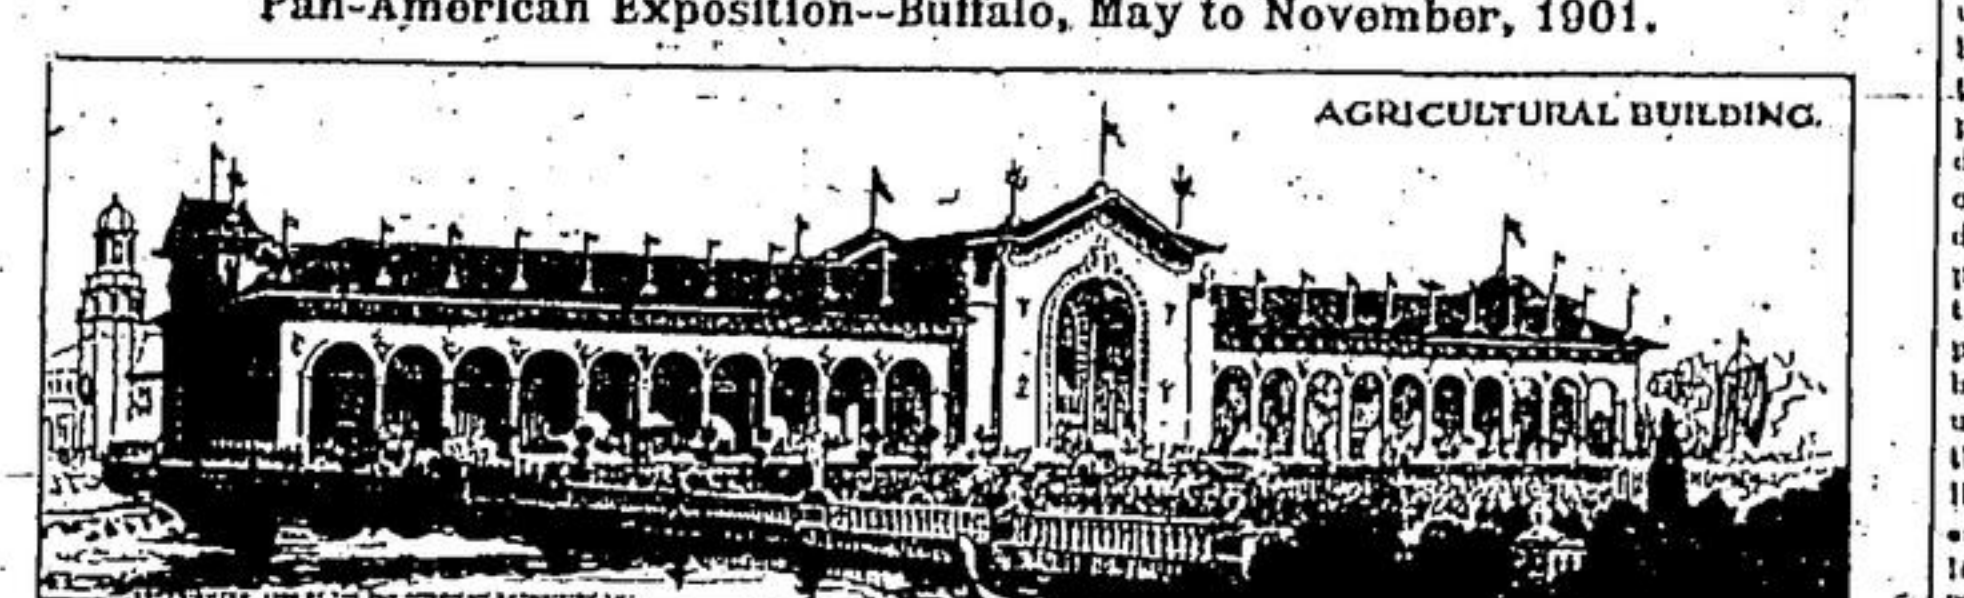

"The children climb over me, and I, a stout, steady man, am on the other. And I'll never say that old bachelor's pardon, no not if I live three days."
"At the end of an hour or two old Mackenzie came toward her."
"What you say, my dear?" she asked.
"No, I won't," said Patty.

Overpaid Virtues

Somehow it must occur to every one who has a child, that good women are often the victims of their own virtues, and that many of the precepts laid down for their guidance are more honored in the breach than the observance. Take, for instance, the old adage that "What is worth doing at all, is worth doing well." This apparently unassailable maxim has slain thousands, and sent the tens of thousands to insane asylums and workhouses.

AGRICULTURAL BUILDING

A woman brought up in that faith feels it a thing to be a virtue that she has up, if she can put out her eye and get a look at the putting in little, close stitches, though the sewing might answer every purpose just as well. She considers it her duty to make a burnt offering of herself over the kitchen stove preparing fancy dishes for her family, though she knows perfectly well she might save herself, and they would be better off if she gave them plain food to eat. She grows old before her time, and she grows old before her time, and she grows old before her time.

Good-bye, Daddy

A proclamation from the Queen.
"Good-bye, daddy, I do wish you could take me with you to the city. I'm going to school, and I'll take care of my little sister, while you are away."
"You're not afraid?" said Patty, opening her blue eyes very wide.
"Yes, I am," acknowledged Araminta. "I am not!" said Patty. And, like a bird she fluttered up the ladder, seized the handle of the next way, and in another minute had both hands full of pink and white quince-blossoms and buds.

Select Family Reading

Quince Blossoms.
"Remember, Araminta and Sapphy, said old Mackenzie, thoughtfully.

Thackeray's Opinion

"The little bit of life," says Thackeray, "are the hardest to see. What would the possession of a hundred thousand a year, or fame or applause, avail to a gentleman who was allowed to see only with the condition of wearing a shoe with a couple of nails inside it? All happiness would disappear and plunge into that shoe: all life would run around there in a circle." And a little while later the power to annoy, they have also the power to comfort and help.

Put the ladder back

"Put the ladder back!" said Polly, holding on to her bloody treasure.
"No," said old Mackenzie, "I will use it, and until I've reported to my master." And away he trudged to the house, where Mr. Maverick was reading "Carlyle" in a great hammock under the vine-covered arbor.
"I've caught her, Mouser Maverick!" said he.
"Caught whom?" said Mr. Maverick, frowning a little at the interruption, as he turned the page.
"The girl who stole our flowers," said he.
"Up on the garden wall?"
"Why doesn't she get down again?"
"Because I've taken the bit ladder away!"

THE ART OF ENTERTAINING

The house itself may be helpful in making visitors feel at home. We should have nothing too hot for comfort, and welcome our friends in rooms made homelike by our daily use. It is well to have a supply of good breakfast. It is customary to give our guests the option of having tea or coffee, rolls and fruit, or just our rooms, or of joining the family. No hostess apologizes for any guest. All are on the same social plane whilst under her roof, and should receive equal consideration. It is a disputed point whether host or guest should suggest retiring for the night. It relieves visitors of embarrassment to know the ways of the household, and a readiness to comply with them is a mark of politeness. It shows no lack of cordiality to refrain from urging friends to extend their visit. They probably have other pleasant plans, and a hostess may be asking a great favor when she invites them to stay in her home. OPPOSITION TO THE ICE TRUST

"I want to get one of them things," said the old lady, pointing to an assortment of thermometers.
"Yes, ma'am," replied the dealer, "how high do you care to go?"
"Why, not too high and not too low. I want one that will keep my house just right this summer."

MAOGIE MADE IT ALL RIGHT

"Maggie did you make that chicken broth?"
"Oh, did, mum?"
"I can't find it anywhere about, what did you do with it?"
"Hure it, that's what I did, I did it but I did it to the chicken, mum?"

EASY AND PLEASANT HOME DYING

Diamond Dyes will color anything any color. The most wonderful helpers in the home to economical dyeing are the Diamond Dyes. They are so easy to use that even a child can dye a rich and perfect color with them. Diamond Dyes make faded and dingy dresses, blouses, capes, jackets, stockings, scarfs, hose and draperies look like new. ONLY ONE

"Two Englishmen travelling in Germany recently saw one of them," the policeman said to one of them.
"Whatever for?" asked the astonished Englishman.
"Because I distinctly heard you say to your friend that Emperor was a silly fool," answered the policeman. "Oh, but I thought you were talking about the Emperor of Russia." But the bobby replied, "It's no use making an excuse, like that. There is only one Emperor a silly fool, and that is you."
