HE NO LET

The beginning of the second week finds us hard at it. There's to be no let up in our July Sale. Lots of goods must be turned into money this month, and broken and odd lots go into the melting pot to be at once melted into money. It never pays, in a store such as ours, to hold on to lines which we wish to clear out, with the hope of getting full price by so doing. We have had a splendid season's business, and of course must have a number of left-overs, odd and broken lots. On these we do not mind dropping a little mone; While the loss is a large one on some lines, the percentage of loss on our total turnover is a mere bagatelle. Take our millinery for instance. When we offer the balance at half price, we certainly stand to lose a large amount, but what is this loss compared to what it would be, if a store, with the standing of ours, undertook to offer the same goods the next season.
