A DRUNKEN PARTRIDDE.

One night, a little after duck, as were about to go into the house, says a writer in Outing, our younger boy but something dark moving behind the dog kennel. The older boy reached in as far as he could, and, with the help of his father, who stood at the other end of the kennol, he drow out a flottering, female partridge, which acted so queerly we could not make out custom, to greet the strangers in the scom to be hurt. There were no bloodstains on her feathers, no marks anywhere, but she could neither walk nor fly and, what was the strangest of all, she did not appear frightened, and and every one, I think, knows that nothing living is shyer than a partridge. We marveled at the sight as she sat quietly in the older boy's hand, breathing very fast, but showing absolutely no fear.

Suddenly our younger boy exclaimed: "Oh. I know what alle her! She's drunk! She's been enting pokeberries!" Sure enough! We had all read about partridges getting drunk on pokeberrice but had forgotten it.

We took her into the house, and she eat on the table while we ate our supper. BIX BIMPLE HULES FOR GOOD LETTER WRITING.

Dr. Edward Everett Hale devotes ble editorial page in the Hoptomber number of the Woman's Home Companion to the subject of "Latter Writ-

He calls the attention of his renders to six simple rules that every one will do well to remember : 1. Know what you want to say.

2. Hay It. 3. Use your own language.

4. Short words are better than long 5. The fewer words, the better.

6. Theave out all fine passages.

As one of the judges in a recent Prize Letter-Writing Contest, Dr. Halo had an exceptional opportunity of examining letters from over 10,000 Blie's up in all the etiquette, roul stylish women. Many of these, he says, were ruled out at once because the hand> writing was not good. . The great besetting aln, however, of latters writers seem to be that they do not know what they want to say when they begin their letter, and flounder about, to the disgust of the reader, until they hit upon a subject, A few intautes spent in thought upon a lettor before you begin to write will ouhanco its interest to the reader many

THE HOME ATMOSPHERE.

A house is not necessarily a home. An elegant edifice, richly furnished, showing a thousand signs of wealth and luxury, may satisfy the sense, but not the heart. That which makes a home is its atmosphere. It is spiritual, not material.

"I wish our home was nicer," said a young girl, recently. "I wish we could have pretty things like other people." But she and all who read these words can have in their homes the most beautiful things to be found either in earth or heaven-love, peace, the abiding presence of Christ. Rich furniture does not add to comfort like kind words. The most costly pictures over painted cannot adorn a home like bright faces. "Hetter a dinner of herby where love is, than a stalled ox and latrod thefawith." What your, home is, depends not on what you have, but what you'are. . ,
