Poetry.

There is a Name whose matchless spell
Captures joy and woe alike:
A Name of strangely wondrous worth,
Most precious Name of all on earth.
Wouldst thou that Name's vast value know?
Then with it to thy Father go.
Hast thou a heavy load within
Of care and sorrow, unremoved?
Do thou with that Name's presence
Through which thou mayst find
Accepting gratefully the loss
Of sins assumed upon the cross.
Hast thou a need or sorrow sore,
New sorrows that thy soul would tell?
There's One who heeds it from above,
Whose nature and whose Name is Love.
Who find Himself thy weary load,
And here to comfort and to heal.
Hast thou a burden in thy soul,
Which all inferiors cannot control?
A longing that's too deep and high
For earthly things to supply?
That longing came from Him who died
To have it more than satisfied.

Select Family Reading

THE NEW MAGAZINE
By Marian H. Van Gleason.

"THIS is for mother, and I want you girls to do the work after supper so that mother can read it. It's not a long one, 'All right,' and then go on with anything. Mothers have so little time for reading. Now, if we all considerate about these things, our mother can have more than one."

When she opened her eyes, she scolded herself. "I am ashamed of you, you selfish mother! You ought to be content to listen to the others and to be happy in their happiness!"

Fannie, returning from a drive, slowly ascending the stairs and smilingly recalled the scene. The drive had given her, heard a voice in her mother's room. Approaching the door softly, she became an unwilling eavesdropper.

"For a instant she was stricken almost to lethargy by the proximity. Then she crept down to the house and made hurried preparation for going out."

Mr. Walker was in the midst of computing interest on notes overdue, and he interrupted. "His office was hurriedly opened, and Fannie entered, supping that notes or other office trials carried no weight whatever in comparison with her important communications."

"Papa, do you know how we are treating mother? It is perfectly atrocious! I overheard her actually accusing herself of being selfish just because she is going to see a new magazine. I want to see that article herself before ever out of the house has read it to her. Just think of it! It is we who are selfish to a shameful degree. I never thought she cared. But why shouldn't she? We would have no doubt we treat her just as had about everything else. I am going to take all I have left of my allowance and buy some new magazines and smuggle them into mamma's room."

"Not so fast, Fannie. You are partly right, I suppose, and I give you credit for your generous purchase of the proof. We have influenced Kate, for I often see her with a copy of mother's own magazine, and she does not relinquish it, either, or even ask her mother if she would like it. Here, I will send something to your papa for I have no doubt he will be glad to have this first really generous purchase we have thought to make. The idea of giving your mother a year's subscription to her favorite magazine as a birthday gift, and then never allowing her to see it until every article of interest is spooned out to her, is a most reprehensible thing. She might suspect that we had overheard her if you make the gift immediately."

On the morning of Mrs. Walker's birthday the breakfast table was set for a festive appearance under Fannie's dexterous fingers. Flowers were everywhere, and several dainty little gifts were cunningly displayed, bearing good wishes.

The most important of all, however, was a neat package, marked "For mother; to be enjoyed at her leisure." And on opening it, Mrs. Walker found copies of three of the new month's magazines.

A Washington diviner, says The Star, tells a story of a certain clergyman's family in which was the custom that each of his children received a Bible verse at the beginning of every meal in place of the more general formula of grace before meat.

One day one of his little girls found out some small sin, had been sent to a number of children, and she listened at a table by herself. When the family was seated around the dining-room table the usual little ceremony was performed, and when her brother and sister had each repeated a text her father called upon her, she remained silent for a moment, thinking, then spoke out clearly: "I have prepared a table before me in the presence of mine enemies."

The burden which is wellborne becomes light.—Ovid.

REMARKABLE.

One day some Americans on a visit to Wales expressed a wish to see a certain old and historic church. The monument was only too pleased to show them round, especially as he believed it would end in a donation being given to his parochial fund. He is as proud of the church as he is of the church, and finished up by asking them to question the scholars.

One of the party accepted the invitation. "You tell me, little boy," said he to one lad, "who George Washington was?"

"Yes, sir," said he, "he was a 'Merry-go-round'."

"Quite right," said the American. "And you tell me what George Washington was remarkable for?"

"Yes, sir," he was remarkable 'cos 'o was a 'Merry-go-round' told the truth."

The American didn't question further.

A WAY TO WEIGH.

A certain peasant supplied a baker with three pounds of butter daily, and after some time the baker noticed that the butter never weighed three pounds. At last he summoned him.

"Have you no scales at home?" the Judge asked.

"Yes, but I never weigh the butter with them."

"Why?"

"Because since the baker buys my butter, I buy his bread, and as I always buy three pounds at a time I weigh the butter with the bread."

He was acquitted.

THE GLORY OF WORK.

There the workman saw his labor taking form and bearing fruit. Like a tree with splendid branches rising from a humble root. Looking at the distant city, temples, houses, domes and towers. Polly cried in exultation: "All the busy ranks of labor, in the regiment of God, March together toward his triumph. Do the work his hands prepare. Honest toil is holy service; faithful work is praise and prayer."
—Henry Van Dyke.

GUIDE TO SUCCESS.

1. Be content with your work, that others may judge it less harshly.
2. If you can outdo your neighbor, do it. To err is human; to forgive divine.
3. You may have to pay the price for standing by right principles, but your work will show the result.
4. Do not have one set of morals in your home and another in business. Right is right and wrong is wrong.
5. The real worker loves his work, and it will sacrifice any pleasure.
6. There may be plenty of clouds in your work-day life. Remember that the most beautiful sunsets come often after cloudy days.
7. Hesitate about giving explanations, unless you are asked for them. Apologies are often mistaken for confessions of wrong.
8. Do more than you are paid for. Remember it takes some people a long time to pay their bills.
9. Allow people to criticize your work all they like, but resent any unfair attack on your character.
10. Know more than your work demands. Extra charge is a convenient thing.
11. When you get discouraged, try and begin anew.
12. There are those who achieve much when they are young; more years than when they are old.
13. Don't be a coward. The sun hates to shine on those who are afraid of their own shadows.
14. Recall some of the things your mother taught you when young—they are worth remembering.
15. You can beat a good horse, but a race horse needs sympathy and encouragement.
16. To-day and to-day make the to-morrow.
17. Never lie. Honest work is built on true principles.

WHEN CRITICISM IS USELESS.

It never pays to call attention to something which is wrong in another's appearance unless it is possible to correct it. As a party of excursionists left their train recently, at the seaside resort where they were to spend the day, a tall girl caught a younger one by the shoulder, and looked her over scrutinizingly.

"Bake's alive, Luella, there must have been some smothering on the seat where you were! The back of your dress is a sight and no mistake. Oh, it's no use trying to rub it off. That would only make it worse you know."

Poor little Luella! The day was spoiled for her, as was easily seen by a glance at her scarlet, sensitive face. The wonder of the great breakers rolling in green and majestic, and curling over in white foam, the delights of finding a shell or a starfish were all forgotten in the miserable consciousness of black streaks on her white frock, unseen as far as she herself was concerned, but painfully in evidence to all the rest of the seaside visitors. Luella spent the rest of the day walking about with her neck twisted, vainly trying to see how she really looked.

"Did you know your girl had been smothered all the evening?" one girl asked another, just as the party was ending.

And the other answered with deliberation: "No, and I don't want to know it. If you had told me in time for me to straighten it, that would have been another matter. But now I don't care to hear anything about it."

The report was deserved. Such criticism should never be offered unless the one to whom it is given has the chance to set upon it.

DOING THE DAY'S WORK.

The surest road to god's work is the simple doing of the day's work. We have no forethought which tells us what endeavor will be most successful, and so we must neglect nothing. We cannot tell what seed will grow and what will fall, and so we sow bread as well as water. It is but seldom that success is won by some brilliant, strategic move. In the majority of cases it is the result of doing the day's work faithfully.

CONTRIBUTOR'S COMPLIMENT.

An actor told a graceful story about Heinrich Conried.

"At a reception," he said, "the loss of the various songs was discussed, and a young woman, a grand singer of considerable beauty, said to Mr. Conried:

"Which would you rather be, deaf or blind?"

"Smiling and bowing gallantly, the great singer answered:

"Deaf, madam, when I am looking at you, and blind when I hear you sing."

NOT LONGER.

"Aren't you awfully lonesome without George?"

"I haven't time to be. I spend the mornings reading his letters and the afternoons unweaving them."

THE MODERN DRAMA.

"I want you to write me a play."

"That sort of a play?"

"Well, we have it specialists. Get me up enough stuff to wedge them apart."

The man who vents his spleen on another gets most of it himself.

There is no sweetening power in the sword, and no biting power in a time I weigh the butter with the bread."

He was acquitted.
