From of servations taken, and annoyances experienced, by this writer in churches where botter things were to have been expected, he is impressed with the culled from the garden diffused its idea that there is "a right smart lot of lunorance" among our young people along this line that ought to be dipelled, and that it is the province of the Sunday School to turn on the light. To be sure the good work ought to begin at home, but whether family instruction in behavior be either neglectled or forgotten, it is our dary to supplement that which is lacking. le simple truth to say that few children tenve their homes without being equally true that many Sunday Schools allow this proper admonition to be perverted with perfect impunity and now and then one may be found that might in strictest verity be called a school of had manuers, if not bad morals, for the two are much more intimately associated than w are went to admit.

Depend upon it, that which is permitted in the schoolroom will be pur sued in the sanctuary. Habits of in attention, disorder, and irreverance aconired and confirmed in the lesson service will assert themselves in the preaching service. Scholars who ar not trained to liston to the tenc er will not listen to the preacher; those who are allowed to disturb the class whispering and giggling, will disturb the congregation; those who are pel vileged to destroy music books by scribbling and tearing out the leaver. will not spare the hymn books; those who make way with lesson helps, library books, and other property of be expected to act as if everything in the church belonged to them; while those who refuse to contribute to the support of the school will graduate in to respectable sponges, dead-beates, lefaulters, who insult God and dis grace his cause by with-holding the preachet's salary and giving nothing to the henevolent collections. It is all well enough to train young people to sing, "I want to be an augel," but it is more important that we cultivate in them a desire to be honest with themselves and others.
