THURSDAY, MAY

FIRST WHISTLK OF THE SPHING There are many strains of nausle That I now delight to hear, instrumental, band and vocal All are wondrous awest and clear : lut when I was just a laddle. In the woods at early Spring From a chestant twig I fashioned A complete, entrancing thing; With my Jack-knife doftly shaping Pounding till the back would allp! When 'twas done the brook seemed laughing As I gave the toy a dip; Then to eager lips I pressed it, lllow it, making woodlands ring Till the other boys came flocking To behold that wondrous thing. Each in turn its music tested,

Each in turn declared it fine. That first whistle of the Haringtime With its includy divine.

Though the years since then are many And my locks are white with snow, To the woods with eager laddies And the happy robine sing.
From the twige we gally fashion
The first whitele of the Spring.

A CABIN CONCENT

The trip down the Chesapeake had not been a pleasant one. A sudden storm had furrowed the placid waters the boy. of the bay, and long, slanting lines of rain had driven the passengers into the cabin. Those who had ligen anticlpating an agreeable excursion were disappointed, and not inclined to make themselves entertaining. Some of the children were crying.

Eugenia, ensconced in one of the few statorooms which the excursion steamer boasted, congratulated herself on her foresight. The possession of the atateroom was one proof of that quality, and the fact that she had brought with her an entertaining book was another. She read on luxuriously while the steamer made her way southward, in the face of the storm. A sonse of carloalty led her, after a time, to turn the knob of the stateroom door, and take a view of the Buch a crowd of dreary, disappointed people! A few of the children were attempting to make the best of the disagreeable situation by playing romping games, to the evident discomfort of their elders. Home of the others were indulging in unchecked lamentations over the unhappy ending of their festive day. A small girl sat at the plane, entertaining the company with a five finger exercise, painstakingly executed.

Eugenia closed the door, and returned to her reading, but the vivid story no longer held her attention as it had done. Her conscience was asserting itself. The faces of the rows of people who had come out for a holiday-a rare event for some of them-came between her and the actors in the book. Suddenly she pushed the volume from her impatiently, and rapped briskly on the door of the next stateroom.

"Aunt Katharine," she exclaimed, as the olderly lady, who also was readcomfortably, regarded her through her spectacles, "if you'll come late him !" the cabin with me, I'll see if a song or two won't amuse these poor folks out

"But Genie," exclaimed Aunt Katharine, and she looked at her niece, "you do so hate to sing in public," "Yos," said Eugenia, "but they expected a nice day, poor things! Just come with me and you will under-
