AT THE HEAD

It is stated in Mr. and Mrs. Ponnell's "Life of James MacNelll Whistler" in that part which relates to his brief West point career that the great American painter was not "soldierly in appearance, bearing 'or habit." Whistler's horsemanship is said to have been hardly botter than his scholarship. According to General Webb, it was not wholly unusual for him at cavalry drill to go silding over his horse's head. On such occasions Major Sackett, then in command, would call out : "Mr. Whistler, aren't you a little whend of the squad ?"

According to Whistler's version to the Pennelle, Major Backett's remark you for once at the head of your

PRIEST NOT WORSTED

A corespondent sends to a Paris conemporary an amusing contest of wit which he recently heard in a railway carriage on a lourney between Compolyno and Royce. There were several passengers. One believed bimself to possess a fund of humor which he intunded to expand on the priest, who got la at one of the intermediate stations. Bostowing a patronising look on the dergyman, he said:-"Have you heard the nows. Monsleur le cure ?" "No, my friend I have not, was the reply; "I have been out all day and have not had time glance at the papers." Then said the traveller, "It is something droadful; the devil s dead." "Indeed." rupled the ecclusastle without the amaliest aurprise or displeasure. Then seeming deeply touched, he added :"Monsleur, I bave always taken the greatest interest in orphans.
