THE CHRISTMAS BURDEN

This is the time when you ought to ake thought of the other man. The way to do it is not to take advantage of him. The matter of advantage to not always obviously one of money, though it amounts to that in the long run. Hours of service mean money ultimately to the individual, whether t shows in dollars or strength.

You can serve your fellow man now by not taking undue advantage of him in the matter of time. When it comes to the rush days-and they are beginning now-it will be an easy matter to take advantage of a great many people some many. Don't overwork your employees. Don't overwork the shot

Don't throw useless burdens upon your friends or your servants. They will have enough to do. He good natured. Be courteous. And remem ber that what you give now will belt to make a merry Christmas for the other person. That thought ought to belp make a merry one for yourself .-The Delineator.
