LIFE ON A BOER, FARM.

The House a Chamber of Horrors, the Housewife Hapelessly Dull. At American woman traveling to South Africa was detained by Boods and competted to spend a month on a Boer farm. "The first night's monotony," else writes, "was broken by the roaring of the ostriches under our window. . We thought it was a tame lion. "The farmer and his family lived childr on sour bread and sour skimmilk, and I was therefore bungry most of the time, and the ripe figs hanging in clusters were pretty after ing. After pushing back the skin of the fig and enjoying the soft fruit, with its tropical taste, I had a refreshing night's sleep, only to awaken in the morning pretty well wared, for my tongue was so swollen and black that I could not talk "The liver wife inughed and enjoyed my discomfort and explained that the skin of the fly had numerous fine thorns and I had not been careful to remove them when enling. "When I told the farmer's wife that I liked butternilk in quantity I noticed that I had a capful or so given me, but whe threw it by the paliful to the pige. Ther were of far more consequence to ber than I, for they would stay longer with her and were ber famillars. I was not.

"Then, wgala, when I was hungry fol butter on my broad a white, clammy substance made from shrep's tall fat was banded to me, and I could not allow the farmer's wife to see me quiver. Bhe sold her butter in the village close by at 75 cents a pound, more or least Bour bread and green strawberries (plenty of them) were considered good

"This Boer family was one of the wealthicat of their kind. There was not a ripple of fun or exuberant life in anything but the live stock. Conversation was a dead language-un-

"The women are mute belogs, accepting their destiny with deep stillness. The wife gives up her strength to the limit, and dies after giving birth to a dozen or more children, to make way for wife No. 2, who gives another dozen children to her country. ### TALES OF TOBAC'S

Christopher Columbus First Discovered Smoking Amongst West Indians. The narratives composed by the chry travelers and sejourners in the nowly-discovered regions of the Western world contain frequent allusions to the tobacco plant and to the practice of smoking prevalent among the natives. The first regular description of the tobacco plant was given by the hermit friat Romano Pane, whom Columbus left behind after his second voyago to convert the Indiana to Christianity. He calls it a Herbs incbrians, and says it was called cohoba, coliobba, and giois.

Ho describes, moreover, a forkshape tube, one end of which the Indians introduce into their nestrile, while they held the other over tobacco leaves spread upon burning cost. They called this tule tobacco. The leaves in a green state of the coloubs plant, he adds, were extensively used as a vulnorarium by the Indians. The prevalence of the custom of smoking among the inhabitants of the West India Islands at this period of their, discovery is attested by the accounts of all the early navigators and explorers; and the excellence of the tobacco grown in some of them, particularly Cuba and Trinidad, is the subject of remark. Not actually pertaining to the plant itself, but yet of some interest in view of the growing habit among English women of amoking, is the following extract- from an Early Victorian "Incidents of Travel in Contral America": "I am sorry to say that gonerally, the ladies of Contral America not excepting (instemals, smokemarried ladies, puros, or all tobacco; and unmarrried, cigars, or tobacco wrapped in paper or straw. "Every gentleman carries in his pocket a silver case, with a long string of cotton, steel, and flint, and one of the offices of gallantry is to strike a light; by idoing it well he may kindle a flame in a lady's heart; at all events, to do it bunglingly would be ill brud. I will not express my sentiments on smoking as a custom for the sex. I have recollections of boautoous lips profaned.

"Neverthelass, even in this I have seen a lady show her proffirmes and refinement barely touching the straw with her lips, as it were kissing it gently and taking it away. When a gentleman asks a lady for a light. she always romoves the cigar from Judging from incidents reproduced by the cinematograph, the eigerette still plays an important part in firtations in Southern America, and it is all done so gracefully that one cannot say that the beautiful lips are profaned. With the picture theatre one travels easily nowadays. When the Antilles came into the possession of the French in the middle of the seventeenth century, tobacco was extensively cultivated in them, and Du Tertre, in his account of these islands describes four kinds the tobacco plant-1. The large green tobacco, or potum, with leaves we feet in length and one broad. 2 Tongue tobacco, with tongue-shaped eaves. .J. Amazon tobacco, brought from the borders of the Amezon River, the leaves of which are very long and ounded at the end. 4. Varinas topacco (Tabac de Verine, Petum Muspue), brought ir in the Province of aricas and the banks of the Assura.

BIRDS' NEST SOUP.

Betting the Material and Preparing It Uninitiated people are apt to think of birds' nest soup as a most disgusting stew of twigs, feathers and what not. As a matter of fact, the next used by the Chinese is a very delicate, semitransparent, gelantinous substance built by the awallow-like birds known as the salangane. The nests are found in the islands about Blam and the Malay archipelago, and the harvest in a year will be about 18,000 pounds, valued at over $100,000. It used to be thought that the nest was formed of inspisanted saliva secreted by the bighty developed glands of the bird. Now t is known that the next is made of a species of niga gathered by the bird. The reason for harvesting the newte lasts from April until September. It taken there months to build the first nest, and just before the eggs are laid the next is stolen by the collector. The bled immediately sets about the build ing of a second next, taking thirty days for the work. This is niso stolen before the eggs are laid.
