SAILOGO GETLLITTLE PAY British Havy Crows Fare Very Badly

"East is east and West is west and noter the twain shall most However true or untrue this statement of the post may be, it is a fact-a permanent fact - that the landsman knows little or nothing of the condidefend him against invasion; and year in and year out, in fine weather and storm, guard the trade butes by which his food and raw materia reach him, says an English writer. The sea is the sea and the land is the land, and, though they most, the anvironment of the seaman is so strange that the man "on the beach" cannot understand his brother of the ocean indeed. in all that impinges on every day economy, the two speak different languages and value things by different standards. The landsman, if he has a grievance, raises his voice-shouts as lustily as he can—until he attracts attention, and he may com-bine with his fellows and form a trade union, so as to improve his condition by collective bargaining. The blue-incket belongs to the "fillent Navy"; he lives and moves and has his being under the shadow of the Articles of War, subservient to the King's Rogulations of byday and bynight, and from the day when he done his uniform he coases to enjoy many of the privileges of the civilian of his own because be has become a King's ing wage of unskilled workers ashore; rallwaymon and others put forward their claims to better conditions of life and labor, and much is made o the increased cost of living. But amid all the talk of labor unrest, what thought has yet been given by the nation to those employes of the state who—to paraplitase a nursery rhyme—man the ships which goard the seas, which feed the Empire, on which floats the British Navy? "Ships, yet mere ships," is the annual demand of the maval enthusiast; but those ships might as well be Dutch overs for all the good they would be to the nation and the Empire if it were not for the skilled officers and men who transform them into floating fortresses, huge and terrible articulate enginee of war. Ships we must have, of all the various classes necessary to the constitution of an adequate fact; docks we must have, large enough and numerous enough for those ships; dockyards we must have so that the men-of-war may be repaired in due season. There is much material to be bought year by year, and the bill is a large one, but the soul of the navythe secret of its prestige-is the personnel. How does it fare with the men of the lower deck?

Will it occasion surprise when it is stated that since the present volunstated that since the present volun-tary system of manning was intro-duced the average bluejacket has re-ceived no actual increase of pay, though certain allowances for special duties have been introduced, for which he can compete? The able sec-man was given 38 cents a day under an Admiralty circular issued on June 14, 1602, and he receives 40 cents to-day, and in the magnitive the sec-to entisty his hunger, and he has more leave; but in actual pay the average man has his pocket no better lined than his predecessor of the wooden walls of early years ugo, This is a retable fact, because there is no comparison between the conditions of the working classes ashore in 1863 and their condition to-day; everything has changed, and changed for the better. I here have been sixty years of un-paralleled economic progress in the protein industrial districts, and the workers have profited year by year. But in the meentime the men of the fleet, out of sight and out of mind, have shared very little in this prosperity.

When the first-class boy, with his li cents a day, is rated an ordinary scames, he is given 30 cents a day, without any prespects of earning good conduct pay or hadge, and eventually, when he is rated able seamen, he obtains 40 cents. As a leading seaman tains 40 cents. As a leading seaman his pay ranges from 44 to 45 cents a day—or from $180.50 to $175.30 a year, to put the matter mine simply—and out of this he has to keep up and replace as need be his kit—for the nation treats the bine jacket less generously in this respect that the soldier and he has to supplement the official distary and meet all the inevitable expenses of life when sahors, and forgetting railway fares when on leave. He may get his leave at Challand, and his home may be in the Midlands or, at Portsmouth or Plymouth.

when he is promoted to patty offi-ear his pay rises to 64 cents, and af-ter six years reaches 72 cents. In addition be may earn certain allowhis pay is small.

The navy is a pyramid, and there is only toom for a law at the top. These law chicky rank and comparatively high pay, but the seamen class, who are sesential to a fighting service, general remuneration, particularly in view of the higher standard of comfort among the working clames subsets, and the very considerable increase in the cost of living which falls on the married blue jects almost as heavily the it does on a landaman.

-HIOR LIVING

the bish cost of living to-day is the cost of high living. We are not make fied with the food we were accostomed to the or twenty years ago. Our pelete has to be tickled with new fineles and ser appetits encouraged with strange culinary concelts. We ane our neighbors, especially our bigger neighbor, and, like the Athenians are constantly seeking something new to the eating, as well as other lines. We go to the table of some "rules," est of left "deletion," and afterwards order up some of the dishes at our own mable board. There is great need of the injunction of the wise man. Pay Last Respects to Memory of Lieut. the military cometery of Aldersbot, Rngland, since the visit of the 'Queen's Own Riffas, last year. During the visit of the regiment they were unfortunate to lose one of their ablest officers, Lieut. Roy Morris Gaowski. and the remains of the gallant young officer found their last rosting place amongst the men who have died in the service of their King and country. No doubt many who knew the de ceased lieutenant, often thought of a memorial to make the spot where their countryman was laid, and therefore it must be a source of pleasure to see a picture of the handsome memorial erected to his memory by the officers of the Aldershot command. The memorial has been designed by Mrs. G. F. Watts, widow of the lamous Royal Academician, and medriled by Mr. R. H. R. Davey, one of the young artists at the pottery said torra-cotta school which Mrs. Watta conducts at Compton, Surrey, where her husband spent his last years. Standing out amongst the other memorials, the one marking the grave of Lieut. Ganwaki attracts the attention of all visitors to the cometery. It stands 12 feet high, and is modelled in terra-cotta.
