VACATIONS FOR EVERYBODY "Horace Greely said he had been twenty years trying to find time to go a-fishing, and a few years later be died from over work and anxiety. Many a farmer lives all his life within sight of running streams, or within sound of babbling brooks, and the suggestion that be hang up his hoe and go a-flahing never reaches him. Thoreau says, The better part of man is soon plowed into the soil as compost'; and I have known some such lives. I knew .a. woman who put her bables in a barrel and left them while she worked in the field with her husband. Together they paid off the farm mortgage, and then bought more Jarms and pald off more mortgages. They never took vacalons. Neither of them ever saw a train of care until the fron mile were laid through their own lands, and when the first train passed through, the old lady was heard to say, 'Woll, Ihave worked hard all of my life, but now I shall have it easy. I can sit and milk and see the care go by. "Another family of my acquaintance living on a large farm, with fifty cows to milk and care for, and five bundred bens to look after, finds time every year for an outing; rather, they hire extra help on the farm and take the time, and they do not take the time what the outlings costs is the best igyestment of the whole year. They have their own tent and camp for a week or more beside a mar-by stream or lake where flahing and boating are good. A fairly good tent can be bought for the price of a week's board at a summer recort, and the test will last many summers. Vacation does not necessarily spell Nantucket. Distance sometimes lends a great deal of enchantment. We forget the birds sing just as sweetly in our own fields as they do to the fields a hundred miles away. Why should we remain abut in during all the hot summer months just because we cannot travel far away? If we cannot afford to own a
