THANKSGIVING Oh, rare is the glory of autumn, With its splandor of waning days ; Its richness of garnered harvest, And a shimmering solden haze. The bright leaves are softly dropping All yellow and crimson and brown; While out from the opened cluster

The new tome pattering down. How sweet is the olden-time tribute Of praise to the Giver of all ; Who grants he the well-hilled gard And the blessings that sichly fall. Our hearts would loin in the chorus, And our voices foyfully sign. Thanksgiving, and land and honor To our most holy King.

Wathank him for height days of se And we thank him for days of rain For it needs the oun and the shower, To fully ripen the golden grain, So late our lives most enter Bright hours and hours of tears;

That we may grow and befitted For the glad sternel years: With our eyes all joyful and shining Or with eyes down-dropped and dim, We offer a true Thanksgiving. Trusting everything else to bim.

The chorue our volces joining, The major or minor sing ; For gladness or pale we bless thee, Our Master, Lord and King ! -Sophia Bropson Titterington

THOLL WAN A MI

Discontent or satisfaction with a object often depends entirely on the way in which it is regarded. A difference in the point of view changes the whole aspect. This truth is well illustrated by a pleasing tittle incident of Robert Dale Owen's childhood, told by bimeelf in "Threeding My Way."

Near the isolated country-seat where I spent my boybood there was a fool bridge but little more than a mil away. For the first ten years of my life I was ferbidden to cross it, and until then I never walked on the turn piked road.

One day father told William and me that be would take us to walk over the river. This was blissful news.

He conducted us by a winding country road up the opposite bank of the stream. Suddenly the view called out my youthful admiration. Across the river appeared a large house, standing in beautiful grounds, not very distinctly seen through the trees. Spacious gardens were surrounded by walls, there was a large greenhouse and beyond stretched a meadow. "Ob," I'exclaimed, "what a beautiful house, pape! Don't I wish I could live there! What a time we could My lather smiled.

"We are going to live there m on," he sald. "Truly, pape?"

"Ob, I am so glad! There must b plenty of nuts there.

What do .you think of them?" I did so, and announced they were much larger and finer than ours. "My child," said father, "you are doing what much wiser and older people have done before. You are looking from a distance at a beautiful place with envious ayes. It is a very pretty place. It is Boxfield, your own bome, where you have lived all のでないなかでんど

LIFT YOUR HEART TO YOUR PATHER IN THANKS

Thankfulness is not the inevitable result of certain conditions, but a matter of deliberate choice. It is mistake to tell ourselves that we should be thankful if we possessed this of that, for possession has fittle or nothing to do with thankfulness Indeed some very bappy people have been changed into discontented, ur grateful ones, by a sudden and unexpected addition to their focume. Be thankful. Do not waste any time arguing whether or not you have any reasons for it. Lift your heart to the Pether of us all in reverent grati-
