GETTING ALONG WITH PROPLE Getting along with people aroms many of us too commonplace a thing to call a talent. And yet its lack often renders talen' worthless, and andervor without fruit. Many a one whose on downants are quite medjocre, gets shead because he has lourned the art of co-operation with others. He does not rub people the wrong way. He does not possess the unlucky faculty of awakening prejedice and stirring up resontment. His fellow workers are tw of his subordinates. Begin right where you are to practice the homely art of getting along you will be tempted to do as thousands with people. At home, in school, in of others have done, and get hold of the office, make a point of keeping on the money dishonestly if you range good terms with those by whom you do it with honesty. ### THE GREATER GAIN

Great diseaters such as the loss o the Titanic last spring, leave the world poorer by many lives, with infinite capacity for noblemess. But at the same time, humanity is the richer by more than an impressive memory. Such exhibitions of high courage make all men braver, kinder, more self-secri-

The life of the civilized world is on a higher level because of the unparallelled heroises of the hundreds of those on the wracked Titanic, who gave their lives for others, and the beroless of those who chose death rather than be parted from their dear-ones. Great as was the world's loss in the lives could ill afford to spare, the gain was even greater.

the English language! So many things have names that are not unsuitable only, but they are misleeding. For Instance, German silver is not really silver at all; pelther is it German. It was invented in Ohina conturies ago, and it is an alloy of some of the inferior metals. Cork legs, too, did not come from Gork and are made of willow. The Prussian blue, the deep and beautiful color, is not a special product of Prussia as the name would lead one to believe, but is made in England. It must not be imagined that turkeys first came from Turkey. or they are natives of America. Irish sew is a thoroughly English dish. and Iriab potatoes come chi-fly from America. Porpoles hide is not obtained from porpoless at all; nor are camel's hair brushes made from the hair of the hump-backed quadruped.
