'Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the famou Labrador missionary, says: "Why do I not want alcohol as beverage in a country where cold is extreme, exposure is constant and physical conditions are full of hard ship? Simply becapes I have seen men go down in the struggle for want of that natural strength which alcohol alone had robbed them of. The flab ermon that I live among are my friends, and I love them as my brothers, and I do not think I am unseconearly prejudiced or bigoted when I say that alcohol is inadvisable, after one has usen'it robbing his best friends of strength, hours, reason, kindliness, love, money and area life. During twenty years' experience on the sea and on the snow in wister-an experisuce coming after an up-bringing in soft pieces—I have found that alcohol has been entirely unnecessary. have been doctoring sick and women of every kind, and have found that I can use other action and which we can control absolutely with greater accurracy in cases of necessity for stimulating the heart. results without it, and I always fear of it?" its power to create a desire for Itself. My first impulse was to seize my sife. and about him there, but as it was summer and knowing the fur would he useless, I decided not to waste his life. But I watched and waited. The bear stooped down and dipped his front paws into the water, forming a little bowl with them, filled them with water and marched back into the bush again; presently he returned and repeated the same performance. I became mighty curious to see what that bear was coing, so I quietly pulled to the opposite side where he was coming down to the water. Now, boys," says he, quiet like, "what do you think that bear was doing with that water?" The party of us' made some vild guesses.
"No," says he, "you are all wrong.

We sat around the fire and smoked bur pipes for some time, very quistly, when the other old woodsman broke the ailence by saying: "That yarn reminds me of an incident that befell me once." The old man continued: "I was lost once up in the Kettle River country and the weather was very bad; there were quite a number of timber-wolves around that country. I had heard tell of. "Night came on and the anow began to fall. so I gathered a little wood to make a fire, thinking it would keep me warm and also frighten any animals away; so making myself as comfort-able as possible under these condi-tions on the friendly side of a large fir tree, started my fire going." After a little pause, to take a few puffe at his pipe, the narrator continued: "I must have fallen asleep, for a crackling sound startled me and brought me to my senses, but luckily the habit of not moving on awakening stood by me. I carefully opened my eyes, to see a huge grizzly but could not feel it; then I remembered I had left it a few feet away whilst engaged in collecting the wood for my fire. To have got up and searched for it would have been fatal, in the dark, for in all probshility I should not have found it at once, so I decided to remain quiety where I was, knowing that I was safe while the fire was burning brightly. There I remained in agony a long time. Gradually the fire grow dimmer, till at last I felt that it surely would soon go out altogether. I sat as still as an image, the cold recently the bear moved, turning his back to the fire and myself, he walk-

E ALL ADVERTISE. A man advertises his character by his deeds, his wisdom by his words or by his silence. A merchant's store, stock and windows speak either well or ill of his business. So when a man says "No, I do not advertise," he knows not what he says. What he really means is that he does not publish printed advertisements.

Some proclaim this as though it were a virtue-yet spend much effort and invest much money in advertising their business through mediums other than the printed word. They may make their wares fit for a king-yet hesitate to introduce them to Brown or Smith. This is inconsistency. - Advertisers' Bulletin.
