MESPLET THE PRINTER.

...... Montreal's Piencer Publisher Was a Stormy Petrel.

There are three separate and distinct ntroductions of the art of printing into Canada. Each was in widely separate folds, and, therefore, entering to different classes of the population and differ ent Bestions of the country. The introduction that holds first place point of time is that of 1761, when Barthologow Green, son of the man who printed the first American news-Halifar, N.H .- both British that time and set up a printing press in the recently founded capital Nova Hootis. Green died within a few months after his coming to Halifax, bu his place in the community was taken John Bushell, who, in March, began to publish the Halifax Gazette the first newspaper printed in Canada.

The second introduction took place welve years later, when, in 1764, the arm of Brown and Gilmore of Philadel hia, still a British city, came to Que bed and opened a printing establishment which produced for the government the Micial (lazette and other official ma ter, all of which were published in the two languages. This was only four years after the capture of Queben, and only year after the signing of the Treaty of
