ensiderably alarmed. It was recently mentioned that in one case a indy issued 250 invitations to a ball at a West Rad hotel. When she found she was charged for 340 guests she naturally asked for as explanation. A list of the names of those who attended was firmished, and she thee found that nearly a hundred persons who were total strangers to her had had the impadouce to present themselves and shade bor hospitality.

The great difficulty in geneding ugainst these posts is that bestsesse in many cases issue such a large number of invitations that it is quite impossible for them to be personally acquainted with all who attend, and it is quite easy for a well-dropped man or woman, noseming society airs, to attend a crowd-ed function without being questioned,
