A chain, fastened to the ground and carrying an Iron balt at the free end. was raised to a vertical position by the approach of the great lifting maynet suspended from a crane.

The attraction of the magnet was so strong that the chain remained in perfectly vertical position. A grownup workman climbed up the chain without disturbing its rigidity in the least. The chain seemed to float in air. The marnette pull on the ball was greater than the gravitational pull on

This remarkable experiment shows the enormous power of attraction exerted by the lifting magnets that are used in fron and steel works to carry about Iron material of every description. The magnets snable the operator to selse from material at any point desired und convey it to any other point within the range of the crane. Incidentally the use of lifting magnets has greatly diminished the risk of accidents in the moving of heavy masses
