THE OLD PSALMS

There's a lot of music in the Psalm, my friend of four days ago, and when the minister reads out some one I used to know.

"All kinds of folk in joyful sounds will sing your voice raised."

There's a lot of music in the Psalm, those dear, sweet Psalms of old, with visions bright of lands of light and shining of a sacrament we sing, I hear them ringing, singing still, in memory's safe and clear.

"Such praise we'll sing, such praise we'll sing, such praise we'll sing, such praise we'll sing."

They seem to sing for evermore of better, sweeter days.

When the lines of the love of God bloom of white in all the way?

And still I hear the solemn strains in the quiet old meeting place.

"O greatly blessed the people are the joyful sound that know."

No singing books we need them, for very well we know.

The tunes and words we loved so well the dear old Psalm book through;

To "Columbia" at the sacrament we sang, as tears would fall.

"I'll sing to thee, O God, on that day of our nation's fall."

And so I love the dear old Psalm book when the time shall come.

Before the light has left my eyes, and my singing lips are dumb.

Upon the wings of Sacred Song, I'll gladly sing away.

"He pants by singing, O God, that comes to thee I say."

She snatched a sun hat and set off through the orchard to take counsel with her next neighbor.

If Malcolm had known of this, but Pete played for own hand. His eyes darted like flame when he had heard the whole story. A tall fellow, well made, neither youthful nor oldish, he had a compelling strength every way. Bred to the law, but withdrawn from practice by the fact that he had no need of work, so would not compete with those who had such need, he had come to be the unofficial justice of first and last resort for all the countryside.

"I had to threaten that woman with a husband for my lady," Miss Norton said solemnly. "My husband was a good way out; I got the poor thing hasn't got the ghost of a sweetheart. In fact, she laughs at all the boys she knows. I can't go begging any of them to marry her; but I thought I might try."

"I'll tell you," he said. "When there's not one of them worthy to look at her, much less love her. I tell you, Miss Anne Maria, Susan is a treasure; she deserves the best of everything, better than you or I. If I could get her, I would."

"You're right," he said. "I'll tell you, Miss Anne Maria, Susan is a treasure; she deserves the best of everything, better than you or I. If I could get her, I would."
