They also make the curious mistake of reasoning that because bronchitis attacks the chest, it only lovades the system through the chast, and hence they only protect that one spot, and leave all other avenues open to attack. By this course they prove their ignorance of the fact that a chill to any part of the body may give rise to broughitis, and also of the other very important fact that in children a chill may have many bad consequences besides a so-called "cold," or respiratory trouble.

The sudden digrestive disturbances of children should properly be often traced back to a chilling of the surface of the body rather than to an error in diet. Properly clad children will digest better, as well as have fewer colds than the unfortunate barelogged ones.
