ALL TO DO OVER ADAIN

It is an open question if the old flaherman in the following story ever got the right answer to the problem that was puxaling his bead. A writer in Everybody's Marazine, at least, leaves one in cloubt on that score. The riddle was this: "If a berring and a half costs a ponny and a ball, bow many herrings can you buy for a shilling Y' The old fisherman had worked on it for some time. "What did you say the mackerel and a belf cost?" he asked, ut last. "I didn't may mackerel ; I said herring," exclaimed the skipper. "Oh, that's different," said the other.

A Boy Ydned With Asbestos Hourd Nestly Tacken fur Two Dividing Partitions of Ashestos, Three Asbeston Nests Wired Together and Some Sawdust Complete an Inexpensive Utenall.

The cooker in question was designed by a young housewife and was made by her bushand under her supervision. It is a compact hox about thirty inches long by afteen deep. The cover, instead of fitting over the top, fits just luside, and it is fastened in place, when the box is closed, by two wooden buttons set on to the edge of the box by scrows. The box is lined on the inside with aubenton board, which is neatly tacked. in. Two fifteen-inch squares of the same anbestos material divide the intorior into three chambers or compartments of equal width. The round openings or "nests" into which the cooking utensils are made to fit are made by rolling pieces of ashestes into cylinder shape and fastening them together with a fine wire.

These round nests vary slightly in diameter, the smallest being six inches and the largest seven inches. The spaces between these nests and the sides of the compartments are fillod with sawdust, which is packed closely. A large about of anbestos, cut to exactly fit over the top of the box, has three round openings for the three nosts. This piece to tacked firmly in place and presents a very neat appoarance.
