THE STEAM ENGINE

Probably no museum collection in the ment of the steam engine, particularly the locomotive, than the exhibit of the United States National museum at Washington, which includes two of the earliest original locomotives and numerous models and accessories.

The blatory of the steam engine is a materialistic romance without parallel in the record of human achievements It covers the stupendous and persist ent efforts of many early philosophers and mechanics who found steam a mysterious uncontrollable force and left it a comprehensible controllable factor of public service.

No one knows how long after it was observed that by holding down the ild of a kettle of boiling liquid a certain force was created, due to the compression of the steam, before any use was attempted with this newly discovered force. It is certain, however, that a sort of steam engine was exhibited in Alexandria, Egypt, about 200 years before our era began, and it was described in a work on pasumatics by Hero of Alaxandria, written between 150 and 130 R. C. This machine was a rotary affair, more theoretical than practical, as were many of the results of philosophy in those days. A recon struction of this engine in model form is in the museum exhibits.

Nothing more is to be found concern ing the steam engine for centuries, fact which is no doubt due to the lack of interest in anything which did not have to do with war or warlike imple ments. A book published in Rome in 1020 gives a description of Glovanni Branca's crude steam engine, showing It to have been an elementary steam turbine, with the sole defect that it lacked any appliances for making the steam follow the vansa, or buckets, of the revolving wheel, so that more of its energy might have been converted into useful work. One author to a treatise on locomotives claims that had some genius improved upon this early device the reciprocating engine would probably nover have been invented, but that we would have had the advantage of our modern turbines much sooner. The museum possesses a model of a very early machine designed by Hir Isano Newton in 1080 which was propelled by a jet of steam projected backward against the air and a model of Denis Papin's invention of about the same time. The investigations of Bavery and Papin and the successful experimental engines of Thomas Newcomen in 1705 with his piston and cylinder soon followed. Newcomen's ideas were improved by James Watt in 1700, who also introduced the high pressure engines, the condenser and later the double action engine. The development of the engine was advanced by Curnot, Evans, Hornblower and Murdoch. A model of the latter's en-

As the result of a wager made by a resident of Marthyr Tydal, an impor-tant fron town of South Wales, that be could convey a load of fron nine miles by the power of steam alone Blobard Trevithick made the first engine to run on rails in 1803 and won the wager for his employer the next year. Trevithick, it has been claimed. copied the stationary engine built in 1800 by Oliver Evans, an American, who was later ingenious enough to attach wheels to a scow and propel it by steam through the streets of Philadel phia in 1804. This curious creation, salled the Oruktor Amphibolis, was the first motorcar to run on American soil.

A model of Trevithick's engine is to he soon in the National museum, as to also the model of the engine employed by John Stevens in 1825 and his original tubular boller. Other models illustrate nearly all the types which began to put in their appearance soon after 1820, when the Btourbridge Lion was built in England and shipped to America, where it was the tirst ougine to run on full sized rails. The niuseum possesses not only the model of this bistoric engine, but the origtoal engine itself. The other original full sized locomotive to be seen in the museum is the John Bull, built by George Stephenson & Sons of England and shipped to America for use in 1831 on the Camden and Amboy railroad. It is interesting to recall that this old relic of early railroading in America made a round trip under its own steam In 1803 from New York to Obleago, where it was exhibited at the World's Columbian exposition. Among the models of early and historic locomotives are George Btephenson's Rocket, which was built in 1820; the H. and O. engine Tom Thumb, built by Peter Cooper to 1820; the grasshopper type engine Arabian of 1831; the Best Friend, used in 1830-1; Baldwin's Old Ironaldes, constructed in 1833; the Sandusky, built in 1837, and models of engines made by Ass Whitney in 1840 and G. A. Nicholls in 1848. Resides the two locomotives and the numerous engine models, there are in the exhibit coach and car models. sections of rails, spikes, wheels and tnodels and parts of valves, pistons and other early accessories pertaining to locomotives and milrouds.

KING BONVER II

Bluce the dawn of litatory the map of Europe has been changing Many years ago there was a mitten the very location of which has been lost, but it is supposed to have occupied a part of Austria and a part of northern Italy. There is a legend connected with this tountry which has been handed down by word of mouth for many conturies. Traces of it have been found among German speaking people and among

The woman, whose name was Josophs, was dark and her child was of like complexion, while the beir apperent to the throne was fair, with blue wyed. The king, when Josepha and her son, who was called Herman, were brought to the palace, called upon his councilor to make an inspection of the two infants in order that the peasant boy could not be substituted for the prince. They reported to the king that, since one was light and the other dark, any one who had seen them, knowing which was the prince, would always be able to judge correctly beween the two. This satisfied the king, and he made no objection to Josepha having bor own son with her. Meanwhile the Borbe were slowly appreaching the capital of Thungaria, their ting. Boris, being a great general and matched against a commander who was his inferior, for King Bonverd was not a warrior and was sbliged to yield the command of his troops to another. This man risked all on one battle and was defeated, and the whole of Thungaria was open to the enemy, who had advanced rapidly on the capital. Indeed, they came as prince was fair. Joseph Bernstein was at the time corving with the army and had rise to be colonel. He seldom saw his for ter mother, and the had never revealed to him the secret of his birth, fearing that he would attempt to lead a revolt which would surely fall, and in stead of gaining a crown he would lose his head. Hernstein heard of the pretender and sepoused his cause, thinklug it better that even a false pre tender should lead the Thungarians to liberty than that they should remain subjects of their conqueror.

They at once visited the claimant to the throne and pronounced him an impostor. He was of dark complexion, while the true

A secret meeting took place between the two men. Herustein reported that the corps to commanded was largely composed of Thungerians and he could begin a revolt with it. The offer was accepted, and auddenly the vicercy and all the Barb civil officers of the goverament were necested. The news spread rapidly, and the people sprang to arms. Not only was a sovereign at hand in the claimant, but a military chieftain in Gernstein.
