BOY AT NINETY-TWO

-VIIE oldest working newspaper man in America, 'if not in the world, a veteran, who defies time, space, distance, and years, a venerable figure, who particularly as it may seem, becomes more active the older be grows.

This is a picture of Sir Mackenale Bowell, of Helieville, Ont., former Premier of Canada, who, at ninetytwo years of age, has been wandering over the barvest fields of the prairie Provinces. The other day the veteran Knight turned up rather unexpectedly in Vancouver on a visit to his son, John. He had gone to Winnipeg to attend the sessions of the Most Worshipful Grand Orange Lodge of British America, of which be is a Past Grand Master, and also Fast President of the Triennial Council of Orangelam. So well did he stand the trip, that fir Mackensie decided to go on to the Coast, making the entire journey of nearly three thousand miles alone and waving saids any proferred aid with his lugwere so pleased with his visit that they requested him to conduct the formul opening ceremony of their aplendid Exhibition, which he did on August 13. Sprightly and blithe as ever, a by-stander humorously remarked that Helleville should advertise for a lost boy of ninety-two.

To speak of the journalistic career of Bir Mackenzie Mowell seems like narrating a chapter of ancient history. Over eighty years ago he en-tered the office of the Belleville Intelligencer as a printer's "devil," and there you will find him to-day busily engage! at his deak writing editor-ials, reading exchanges, and cordially receiving visitors—that is, when he is not at Ottawa attending to his legislative duties or making flying trips across the continent. Buch a record of continuously long service and devotion to the duties of a profession is one of the marvels in the annals of newspaper-making and editing

It is interesting to recall in this connection that you cannot undermine or permanently injure the physical or mental efficiency of some of Canada's eminent man. Sir Charles Canada's eminent men. Bir Charles Tupper, also a former Premier of Canada, residing at Beriey Heath, Kent, England, and now in his ninety-fifth year, had an attack of pneumonia at ninety years of age and completely recovered. The disease would likely have proved fatal in the case of less young and less vigorous persons. John R. Booth, of Ottawa, the widely-known lumborman, manufacturer, and capitalist, now in his mintieth year, while actively ongaged a couple of years ago, in dismantling a saw mill, which had been partially burned, was struck by a falling timber and had his collar bone and several ribs fractured. When carried away by loving hands, Mr. Booth remarked in a tender tone to several of his life-long employes who gathered Canada's eminent men. Bir Charles his life-long employes who gathered about him: "Good-bye boys, I fear this is my last." They replied: "Ob, you again in the yard." And they have, for the veteran rallway builder and captain of industry mended and te as good a man physically and men-

Some three or four years ago, when Sir Mackenzie Bowell was a guest one evening at the Albany Club, Toronto, be alipped, while mounting the stairs, and fell heavily to the floor. For a few weeks his life bung in the balance, but he railled, sithough then verging closely to ninety. The late Lord Strathcone, Canadian High Commissioner, in his ninety-third and in his ninety-fourth year, crossed the ocean several times to visit Canada and consult with the authorities at Ottawa on Imperial problems. It is the opinion of those who knew him best that the noted statesman and philanthropist would be alive to-day had it not been for grief and sorrow borne over the death of his wife, for as the was laid away in her final resting place, the desolate husband veverently remarked in low tones: "There goes my beart," an evidence of tender devotion which touched every by-

Another long-lived Canadian was the late Senator Wark of New Brunswick, who, when a hundred years of age, attended the sessions of the Benate of Canada at Ottawa, being the oldest legislator in the world. He insisted on making the trips to the Capital, and was usually accompanied by his daughter. Once he remarked, when she attempted to assist him from the train, that she might better have remained home and not tire have self out tra vilng the long distance, as, in such busy days, it was enough for a man to visit Ottawa alone without having to look after a woman. Bir Mackenzie's sotive political carser is widely known, and to-day he stands as one of the veteran political leaders and public men of the Dominion, and apparently is in fine fettle for many more years of usefulness and service.-Toronto Star Weekly.

Electricity In Toyland

It is only recently that electricity began to play a completions part in the Christman holiday. Of all the electric toys the little trolley car is one of the best. It gets its power from the lighting circuit and will run on its circular track quite well, as well as its lig cousin runs in the city streets Toy motors and generators to run toy ma-chinery are especially interesting to boys. For girls modern doll houses are illuminated with tiny electric lamps. This year Santa Claus will have in bis pack a new toy for little girls, a miniature electric range. It is a complate practical range that cooks and bakes perfectly, the very thing for which little girls have longed with all their bearts. It is a safe plaything for children, and when using it they not only occupy themselves happily, but they actually learn to cook. There a complete set of utensils furnished free, with a cookbook for children written so simply that they can understand it without difficulty. This small range to afteen inches high, with all burners and a practical little oven.

"Yule Baughe" and Minos Pise. The Yule doughs (little cakes), mince ples and plum porridge (now plum pudding), were old supecial Christman dishes. The first, niso called Yule bables, had their origin in Rome, where tmares of the child Jeaus and the Virthe Mary were sold by the bakers on Christman eve. The following account of the English mines ple, un recorded by an old traveler, will doubtless beinteresting to housewires of the presout day: "Then every family against Christman made a famous minched pye, called Christman pye; it is a most learned misture of meats, tongues, chicken, eggs. engar, ralsins, femon, orange peel and various kinds of spicery. Plusy also made a sort of som with nlums, which is not at all inferior to the pre, which is in their language called plum porrlige." Werwick. In his account of the ceremonies of Christin: a ere, writes: Come guarde this night the Christmas

One story with a foundation in folk lore Don Juan was an amiable enough gentleman, except that he had a bad habit of wandering out nights and murdering people. His custom was to approach somebody on the street, ask him the time, and, when he replied, telling him he was lucky because he knew the hour of his death, stabbed him to the heart. This went on until one night Don Juan killed his dearly beloved nophew, whom he had not recognized.

Hitricken with remorse Don Juan confessed to his priest, who for penance ordererd him to go alone at midnight to a certain church, before which was a gallows, and to tell his resary under the gallows. Three nights he attempted to fulfill the command, but was driven back by the groans of the persons he had murdered. After begging in vain for a lighter penance he finally reached his goal under the gallows. And then augels from heaven came down and hanged him.

As a matter of history there was folk fore Don Juan was an amiable he was a dishonest collector of revenues. He was jalled, and, to secure his liberty, his wife was compelled to suffer incredible humiliations at the hands of a judge. Don Juan broke prison, went to his home, found the judge there, and stabled him to death. Later he was mysteriously lynched one night before the church, and from this grew the legend that the angels had punished him for his sins.

A striking story of ghostly revenge is the legend of Don Juan de Nava, priest and guardian of his

There he found the emaciated form of a man who looked as if he had long been dead. The man told him that in ancient times he had died unshriven and had been blistering in hell ever since. As a special favor, however, he had been permitted to return to the earth to use if he could find a priest who would hear his confession. Padre Lecuona thought he had to deal with a madman. He heard the confession and administered absolu-tion. When he told his story at the house of his friends they scoffed at t, one of them saying the hovel had been uninhabited for many years. To make a test of it the priest and companious went to the house the next day. They found the door covored with cobwebs as if it had never been disturbed.
