BOY WANTED

"Wunted -a boy." How often we, This quite familiar n sice sec. Wanted-a boy for avery land Of task that a basy world cauffed. Ho is wanted -wanted now and here; There are to vue to taild; are paths to

There are sens to sail; there are gulfs In the ever onward murch of man.

The world is eager to employ Not just one but every boy Who, with a purpose staunch and true, Will great the work he finds to do. Honest, fulthful carnest, kind-To good, awake; to ovil, blind-A hourt of gold without alloy -Wanted -the world wants such a boy.

RESPONSIBILITY AN EDUCATOR

Responsibility is the great test of chara tor. Young people prove what is in then by the way they missure up to the responsibility which time lays on the shoulders. It is a pity when the mistaken kindnesses of friends and parents, relieve boys and girls of all responsibility. are wakened at theright time in the morning Their day is planned for them, and they are watched to see that they overlook noth ing, that they neglect nothing. When such young folks are confronted with rent responsibility they are in danger of failure just because it is so startlingly now.

Responsibility is not only a tost, it is also an educator. The girl who is made responsible for caring for her garden ple or her pet canury is learning something. The boy who has to have his supply kindling ready every morning is mastering one of the most important lessons. Little people should assume little responsibilities which should be increased to keep pace with their growing strength.

Occasionally we run across people who are described by the adjective "irrespon sible" They take it for granted that I la somo one's business to keep an eye on their, to see that they do as they should. "Why didn't you wake me at seven o'clock?' a young man angeily asked his sister. "You know I had to be at the office at half just eight." Homothing was wrong with his training, surely, when he could assume that it was another person' business to start him on his day's work on

In order to be equal to our responsibilities we must practice. Many a youth is turned out of college apparently a creditably finished product, who immediately proves unequal to the demands of practical life. He is well educated in the sense that his manners are good and his habits exsimplary. But responsibility and himself are hardly on speaking terms. He has been looked after, directed, provided for, till he hardly knows how to decide a question without appealing to some one olse.

Do not dodge responsibility. Welcome it. For unless responsibility is a factor your sducation, you will be turned out the world unequal to its just demands.

The chief advantages claimed for the submarine include comparative tavis tillity when submerged, coupled with immunity from guntle while in that condition. It carries a weapon against which no adequate protection has been found. It presents a small and difficult target when itself assailed by torpedo attack. Other elements in its favor are low cost, handliness, segworthiness in rough weather, comparative immunity from floating mines as well as those hild in very deep water and the possibilities of use us a mine layer.

On the other hand, the submarine is bandleapped by many disadvantages and limitations. Its radius of action is small. Its speed is low, about 14 knots on the surface and 10 knots submerged. The periscope to uncleas during darkness, and to operate at that time the resuch must therefore come to the surface, thus tendoring themselves very utherable to the attacks of surface eraft. Once the submarine's bull to damaged by gunflre, ramming or othcrwise, it is no longer able to submerge, mul its usefulness as a war vessel is ended until repairs can be made.

When flying at an elevation of lead han toxx feet air craft can usually see submarines operating near the surface. -World's Work.

SERPENT OF LERNAEA

Bolentific Basis For the Myth of the Many Headed Monster. A noted surgeon suggests that the story of the many headed serpent of Lernaca, if a myth, is yet a myth with an altogether scientific foundation. The monster was credited with anywhere from nine to 100 heads, and, according to the legend, if one was cut off another immediately grew in its place. Some averred that each head was replaced by two.

The origin of this serpent, as well as to acts and its final destruction by forcules, are entirely fauciful, of course, but some recent juggling in biological inboratories seems to show that the suclents may bave got that conceptions of its form and being from what they had actually seen. Professor T. II. Morgan, for instance, bus cut off the anterior end of an earthworm and excised a place of the central nerve cord. This left the auterior nervo onds, and a head grew from
