OF THE DIGGINGS

DENNIS H. STOVALL

Inn

LONG the winding course of an unciont river channel, that riba the California Hisklyone, a score of hydraulic monitors hurled their mighty streams against the towering oliffs, malting the mountains down and washing from them the grains of precious gold. Night and day the glants thundered, that n moment of the valuable time covered by the late winter season of rain and anow, might be lost. Every minute the monitors could be worked mount more treasure addat to the increasing store caught by the alulace. Pipe lines were stretched down the mountain aides, feeding the hungry glants from the fluntes that wound in and out among the hills. Flannel shirted mon worked like husy ante in the red clay dig-

Well down toward the lower end of the old channel, on what was known us the Blue tiravel mine, Buck Jackson and hi son, Leonard, stood between a bettery of two giants and talked solarly. All the morning, and part of the night before, the father and the son, with the Blue Gravel prow, had worked like Trojans in an attempt to clear the diggings and get the mine operating egain. For the two giants were quist. Like grim cannon, their norties pointed at the towering mountain wall, they stood in sitence. In the language of the mines, the Blue Gravel was "choked"-suffocated and strangled by the great mass of gravel and debris its own monitors had torn down in the process of unsarthing the nuggets of gold. "She's badly choked, and no mistake." spoke Leonard. He was a tall, broad shouldered youth, with the clean limbs and the clear eyes of a student : in truth, he was a student of mining engineering at Barkeley. These two weeks he would spead on his father's sales, were in line with his course of study at the university "You're right, Lan," spoke the olds man, with Litter suphasia. The deep lists of his weather-broased cheeks, which told of hing service in the digglege, seemat to grow parceptibly despor. He was a g man and he was a typical miser, from his slouched but to his steel shod boots "His's choked all right-and choked bed." he declared. "And we won't get another ounce of gold out of these bills till the diggines are opened. That hogheck in the guich is the cours of all the trouble. It wire to Links out." "Yes, that's the only way," the son delightful hours together in the rod olay diggings. But Fox was gone now, and boyond immediate reach ; yet there was one other, a youth also, whom he believed could help thom. "I bolleve, father, we could get Howe Morton to-"

"What ! Howe Morton ! Mulcolm Morton's son, and the junior member of the company ?" Buck Jackson turned and gazed with incredulous eyes into Loonard's face. "You must be out of your right mind, lad. To help us is the last thing he would do., Old Maloolm has been waiting for just such a chance as this. He would crush me, and laugh while doing it ! You can't tell me anything about him ; I know him well." "I'm not trying to tell you anything about Malcolm Morton," Leonard returned undlamayor by his father's unfavorable opinion. "I do know Howe. He and I played together, you know, as little lioys And we are classmates now at Barkeley. He, too, is home for a season of practical experience. If you don't mind, I'll go over and have a talk with him. Nothing can be lost by it."

all the while he kept his gaze on his boy, looking at him intently, searching him keenly. It was as if there were something in the heart of his own son that he could not understand. The youth stood unflinchingly before him, with purpose and determination printed on his face. Finally his [father's gaze softened, and a subdued tone came into his deep base voice. "Go aboad, lad," he said, "I leave it to you. I'll admit that I can't get at the bottom of the thing. Let me know by two o'clock this afternoon what luck you most."

Buck Jackson was silent fore time, and

Leonard Jackson realized that his father had little hope of their getting any seals tance from the Mortons. Yet the youth was determined to try. He struck out at once over the winding trail that connected the two diggings. Though the two properties adjoined, the great Royal Group, with its thousand seres of working ground and thibler land, with its miles and miles of flumes, being just above the Blue Gravel the two diggings were three niles apare For two intles Leonard followed their own ditch to the intake, then elimbed a ridge and came suddenly upon the deep, broad diggings of the Royal Group. It was as i he had come unexpectedly to the rim of vast crater. Down in its red-source depthe, four glants hurled their shafts liquid stock rearing, and growling like ravenous monetors. The diggings crew swarmed over the slate bedrook and among the network of sluices. It was a scene that made the youth's blood pulse with quicker beat. Yet he turned sick at heart when he thought of their own mine, only a little below, standing idle and still. He followed the rim of the diggings of the Royal Group Camp, with its jumble of cubins, buildings, and tents. A to ... ofer shanty, but little more protentious than the structures about it, served as the office In here Leonard found Howe Mortos The latter was dressed like himself, in the serviceable garb of the mines. He was parched on a high stool, closely studying a working diagram. He awang round and extended a cordial hand. "Hello, Lee Hop up on that other stool, and tell me what's on your mind."

"Trouble, Howe," Lacard replied desiring to come at once to the business of his call. "The filus tirevel choked so us yesterday."

"Ho I heard," the younger Morton to spouled. It seemed to Leonard that spake saif the matter was of little concern This brought a failing of missiving and doubt into the mind of the saller. "I have an idea it's the hogistek, down

A LITTLE BIRD TELLS

Now, isn't it strange that our mothers Can find out all that we do If a body does anything naughty
Or says anything that's not true?
They'll look at you just a moment Till your beart in your bosom swells
And then, they know all about it,
For a little bird tells.

Now where's that little hird come from, Or where that little hird goes; If he's covered with beautiful plumage, Or black as the king of crows; If his volce is an hourse as a raven's Or an clear an the ringing of nells, I know not, but this I am sure of— A little bird tells.

You may be in the depth of a closet, Where nobely sees but a mouse ; You may be alone in the collar ; You may be on top of the house : You may be in the dark and the silonce Or out in the woods and the delis— No matter—wherever it happens, The little bird tells.

And the only way you can stop him Is just to be sure what you say : Sure of your words and actions; Hure of your work and your play. He honest, be brave and be kindly : He gentle and leving and well, And you can laugh at the stories All the birds in the country may tall. -School Education.

LIGHT BEERS

The Ploneer is doing a great public service in sounding a note of warning against the insidious danger which threat ens our long fought-for prohibiton of the liquor trailie. I hope the following from that paper will be taken to heart by the friends of temperance :

"For years the liquor traffic has been preaching beer-drinking. The distillers know that beer drinking develops an alcoholic appetite, that demands stronger beverages. They know that the diagraceful and lying statements by which beer man have been endoavoring to induce woman to drink will tend towards the shocking spirit-drinking of wires and mothers that curses Great Britain to-day. "Garmany's bear-partions have produced a brutality that will make Germany a byword for centuries to come. Vet some of these liquor men would like to establish the German hear-gardons here.
