The Referendum Ballot

The tempérance people are not finding it so difficult to unswer the questions as other people who are not out-and-out prohibitionists, because anyone favoring prohibition merely has to answer all stituencies. four questions in the negative. It is difficult to see how it is going to work out in the other cases. For instance, one question has been raised that if majority is in favor of the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act how could the Government carry out the wishes of any subsequent majorities on the other three questions by amendments to the Ontario Temperance Act which, it is pointed out, would not then exist if it were repealed under the first question?

The general tendency on this North American continent seems to be to out-law the traffic in liquor: This extends even to the sale of beer and wine in many sections. In the state of Michigan last week a majority of about 120,000 votes was cast by the electors against the beer and wine amendment. This is a fair indication of how the vote will go in Ontario next fall. The people are pretty certain to vote No. No. No, No to the four questions to be submitted.
