WHAT MONEY CANNOT BUY

There is no more serious mistake han to suppose that money can buy everything. It cannot purchase a good night's sleep nor an appetite. Many a millionare is a sufferer from dyapepsia and insomnia. Money capnot buy friendship, nor peace of mind. nor a tranquil conscience. The best things in life may be had by the poorest, bought without money and without price.

THE COLONEL'S FATHER

A story that casts an interesting light up the completeness with which th lightish nation threw itself into the struggle with Germany appears in Mr. Isano Marcosson's The Business of War. I was talking one day to the commanding officer of the largest basesupply depot in France, says the author when un crect, white-haired man wearing the single star of a subsitern came up, saluted, and gave a message to procise military fashion. When he was through he clicked his reels together. saluted again, and with a "Thank you. sir," made off.

"Do you know who that officer is? the colonel asked me. "No," I replied.

"fle is my father." The father was seventy-one years id and a rotired country squire, but like many of his countrymen, he felt Phone 1012 that he had to be doing something. and so had replaced a younger man in the Army Seriler Corta.

MAKING THINGS EASY Having an easy time is synonymous with being useless. If that is your ambition, weed it out of your heart. No one ever succeeded in having an easy time and being helpful. You cannot strengther the weak and encourage the disheartened and do your share of the work that stands waiting to be done in this busy world, and at the same time "take it easy."
