the return of the liquor traffic in any While there never was any doubt in the minds of the members of the local teferendum Committee that a large majority was sure to be recorded against the repeal of the Ontario Temperance Act no one was so sanguine as to predict such a magnificent majority as was won at the polls on Monday. From the moment of the opening of the polls, however, it was clearly manifest that the majority would be large. At nine o'clock, when the polls were opened, every one of the four polling places in Acton had a large quote of women ready to poll their vote, and until well on in the afternoon they came in a regular protheir votes, and when the polls were closed at five o'clock few indeed were who had not voted. To the women of Acton a great share!

of the credit for the prohibition victory is due. As canvassers and acrutineers they worked with an enthusiastic energy and concentration that was an inspiration to all who are aincerely desirous of advancing the welfare of Ontario by relaining its prohibitory law. At each of the polling booths women scrutineers and workers, slert and helpful, were busily engaged from the time the first ballot was cast until the last one was count-ed. Men who have had long experience in political campaigns were impressed by the appearance and the mental activity of our women workers. Never again will any reasonable man presume to say that the women are less capable or less observant in these matters than the men. It is generally recognized that a new power for good who cannot profitably be spared from has come into public affairs and it has come to remain permanently. To the following members of the local committee great credit is due for he magnificent results achieved here:
