A CHANGE OF HEART

"I care for nobody but myself and my dog," said Tommy at play in the sweet new way.

A CONVINCING ARGUMENT

Handley Hite was in some respects notoriously inconsiderate of his horse.

"You'd damn well be a damn good horse," said he, "I care for nobody but myself and my dog."

"That horse care had stood straight up till then, but all at once he lay on his back, and it nudged Pete Cooke, who was standing in the stable door with me."

"Well, Jack Allan and Handley Cooke were two of the liveliest scholars whose names ever got on the register of the old school."

"It was the fashion fifty years ago for the boys to be very fond of their school."

"While we wait, let us be busy. It may be but a minute, but shall we let that minute go unutilized?"

"An amateur charity worker visiting a family in a tenement district was surprised to see a mother drench a cup of cold water in the face of her baby."

THE OLD MAN OF THE BIG CLOCK

Perhaps you've noticed the new advertisement in our column. It looked all over when I saw it. I was in the habit of reading the paper and I had some new 'quits' for my column and was not being used to print them in my column.

"I had commented to tell about Jack Allan and Handley Cooke's school days last week when I found the editor had been kind enough to give me an allowance of space."

"An amateur charity worker visiting a family in a tenement district was surprised to see a mother drench a cup of cold water in the face of her baby."

"Wouldn't you now?" said the fond mother admiringly. "Sure, I'd been practicing for three weeks. He won't yell next Sunday when he's baptised, he'll be used to it."

"Hares and Hounds?" When that was asked, he said, "I was a great sportsman, but I was a different undertaking to play the game and get back to school before the master's entrance with his pointer on the school door announced that the school hour had arrived."

"That's the Bike I Want, Dad"

"It's one like Bob Harding's. He isn't a bit stronger than I am, Dad. But he can always trim me, no matter how hard I strain. My cheap old bike doesn't run as easy as his C.C.M."
