THE SUDDEN DEATH OF ALBERT WHITE

Was at the Base Ball Match at Georgetown on Monday Evening

Death came with appalling suddenness to Albert White, Agnes Street, on Monday evening, when it was entirely unexpected. Mr. White had been ill for several weeks in May, but had recovered, and returned to his home at 415 Main Street, and on Saturday evening he was out with the crowd to Georgetown to witness the base ball match.

On Saturday evening White was a son of John White, who is now living in Seaford, in his eightieth year. He was born in 1846. He was married in 1867, and had a family of five children. He was a member of the St. Luke's Methodist Church, and had been a member for many years. He was a well-to-do man, and had a comfortable home.

EVERYTON

The garden party last Friday night under the auspices of the woman's club, was a success. After a leisurely ride over unexpectedly good roads, for it had rained the day before, we arrived in this old-fashioned "centre of trade." There were many improvements noticeable even in the houses as we passed along. We directed to a cross street where the name I did not get and turning up the street which might be called "at night" but which some one called "Globe Street," we entered the gate called "not 'twelveth" we just called it "Globe Street." Here you paid the price of admission and found a large open space where you paid your money for all the things you desired and went out your chest to perfection. Going forward we found some provided for a large company. On our side was a booth where people things to eat and some to drink could be bought for yourself and lady. There were every privilege of cars and they were gathered there in large numbers. Cars are great at garden parties for the old folks to sit in and listen and talk, etc. We noticed some young folks sitting there in the crowd in especially good humor. They were out for the night and enjoyed every number almost as well as the fully equipped programme by Joe Williams, the Acton Orchestra and the Acton Band. The weather was well chosen and all went home happy, even the fellow that fell over the hay, but that's another story. Mr. Roy Hunter was the courteous chairman of the evening. Gate receipts were $197. Proceeds for Armenian fund and Solitude Hotel.
